Modiste Commends and Advises the Sub-Deb

"They are just little artists," was the compliment paid by Madame Antoinette, fashion expert, to the young designers and dressmakers of Technical and Central High schools, in her lecture yesterday afternoon at Thompson-Belden store. Madam had visited the classes and admired their work on her recent trips to the Omaha high schools.

School girls and mothers filled the lecture hall and crowded about the tables in the millinery department to hear Madame Antoinette's message.

to the subdeb—for flappers they must not be called, asserted madam. "The lovely rising generation is not being properly spoken of," she defended. "When they are called flappers, cake-eaters and jelly beans."

Madam herself was a glittering snow queen against the sable draperies of the stage upon which she lectured and showed her models. She wore a shapely gown of heavy white brocade satin, over which fell an ermine-edged mantle of white lace, reaching to the floor and caught at the throat with a strand of brilliants. Upon her head she wore a small white turban, worked with brilliants, and banded at the base with silver ribbon.

"Your face belongs to the multitudes, but your body is your own," was one of madam's mottoes in urging young girls to clothe themselves more fully. Corsets and bandeaus, she urged, are necessary for decency and poise in dress. She admitted boneless girdles for young girls, but announced that stays are on the way back to the mode.

"If you must use a powder puff at least use a clean one. And don't forget to powder behind your ears," was her advice. "We know something of what happens to our face, but we are terribly unprotected in the rear."

"The most disgusting characteristic a woman can have is to announce herself with an odor of perfume," proceeded madame. "It is very nice to spray a little faint perfume through an atomizer on your face and hair. But to spill it on your handkerchief is improper."

Madame condemned the cigar smoking girl in no measured terms and took occasion to score the users of slang.

"Slang is failure's apology for itself. Slang, painted faces, careless figures, and cigar smoking go together. Girls cut them all out!"

Models, slipping through the black curtains to the strains of a harp, displayed the wardrobe for the young girl. The thin and the plump subdeb, and the tall, queenly girl, were among the varied types who exhibited. Two older women offered suggestions to mother how to keep up with daughter in the quality of dress.

The peasant type of dress, with jacket and full skirt, was suggested as appropriate for school wear. Full skirts should be eight inches from the ground for the jeune fille, while tight skirts may be as high as 10 inches. Both lace and wool scarfs, and embroidered collar and cuff sets, were recommended as dress accessories.

Plaids are coming back, announced madame in displaying a plaid silk model which she commended for afternoon wear.

Church Bazar Sells Burgess Toys

Peter Rabbit, Mr. Owl and Jennie Wren are among the Burgess Bed-time Story toys made by young business women of First Central Congregational church and sold at the Christmas bazar of the church which came to an end last night. Several of the figures, including the Peter Rabbit at the left, were designed by members of the church group to represent the characters sketched in the Burgess children's stories which are familiar to readers of The Omaha Bee.

The young women worked every Monday evening from the first of October at sketching these clever toys on wood, cutting them out, gluing them together and painting them in gay colors. Scores of them were sold at the bazar.

Abe Reynolds is of the type whose characterization does not belie the men of his race. In the musical play, "Bubble Bubble," he will be seen in a role to which he is well adapted.

During the showing of the play in New York recently, the eastern press proved generous in the allotment of space to Reynolds and company.

Clark, which was solemnized on Monday at Clarinda, Ia., by the Rev. Mr. Bishop of the Methodist church, was announced Friday. Miss Sally Cravy was Mrs. Clark's attendant.

In fact the wedding and engagement rings and still at the jeweler's, who promised the bride should have them the day of the "announcement." Miss Arter, who is noted for her originality, chose to have her diamond set, according to the fashion of her mother's day, engraved setting to match the wedding ring, which is the one both Miss Arter's maternal grandmother, and mother have worn.
