Luncheon for Mrs. Magney.
A surprise luncheon for Mrs. George Magney, to say farewell before she leaves on her world trip, was given yesterday noon at the home of Mrs. O. Y. Kring. Guests were members of a card club of long standing, and included Mesdames C. L. Hempel, Horace J. Holmes, Mae Potter Sweet, James E. Bone, W. H. Whitehouse and Charles Voorhees.

Boys Choose Vitamines

Proteins, carbohydrates, calories and vitamins are nuts to boys and girls who lunch in Omaha's largest cafeteria, that at Technical High school, according to Miss Kate Kiewit, cafeteria manager. Skill shown by the girls and especially by the boys in picking out a properly balanced ration has been a delight to Miss Kiewit. The wisdom of the boys in the more impressive as most of them eat their principal meal in the cafeteria in order to be free for night work. Most of the freshman boys on entering register a masculine dislike of salads and a fondness for large quantities of exclusive roast beef and potatoes. As they lose in greenness they gain in greenness, and the end of the year shows them selecting varied measures which delight the heart of the domestic science expert. At the same time a switch from white bread to the more nourishing graham puts in its appearance. We learn from Dwight E. Porter, principal of Technical High school, how the miracle is accomplished. An efficient part of the student welfare council is the cafeteria committee, appointed to this service by the welfare council out of its own membership of student representatives. This committee works out suggested menus with the co-operation of the domestic science department. The menus are printed on posters and hung in the various home rooms. Brief programs and occasional speeches from outside, reinforce the effort of the silent message and all the attention of the students to the wisdom of eating wisely but not too well. All this fails to wholly eradicate the adolescent girl's sweet tooth and her fondness for making a meal from a chocolate malted milk or its equivalent. However, Miss Kiewit finds the girls not wholly at fault in this, for many of them bring the more substantial parts of their lunch from home, and they have not so much money to spend as their brothers who work. Many Omahans will be astonished to learn that the volume of business done by this cafeteria is the largest of any eating place in the city. Two thousand two hundred persons patronize it every day, while 1,000 of these get a full meal. The cafeteria room, shown in the picture, accommodates 850. The students lunch in three divisions, at 12, 12:30 and 1 o'clock.

Girl Complains of Eaters in Theaters

Says Muncher Behind Her in Theater Ruined Show—Upset, Wants Something Done—Should Legislate Against Them.

By MARTHA ALLEN.

What is a person to do when a child or grownup in a seat behind you in the theater continues to munch candy or rattle the wrappings of the box all through the performance? "Now, I ask you," writes Susan, "is it fair to allow anyone to eat in a theater? It is so disturbing. Just last week I missed half the jokes in the actors' lines because a young girl back of me ate candy in a noisy way all through the show." Since this is the day of much legislation there ought to be a law passed that patrons of the theater check their food at the door. A strict law enforced might prevent such disturbances. Officials should announce that theatergoers will have to eat before or after the performance or else go without entirely. This proposed law might make a good many fat persons thin but they could make the sacrifice for the sake of others about them. Lack of consideration for others is a bad fault for anyone to cultivate. It seems necessary at every turn to realize that there are others on this earth. That is just what the hundreds of books on etiquette are all about—the thought and great consideration for your associates. So this question of eating in the theater is against all those rules. This utter lack of regard for others' feelings is a selfish way to live. Self-denial of the little things will just make it that much easier to withstand the big sacrifices that are necessary for all of us to make some time in life.

Luella—Christmas presents for the young man are many, but the kind depends upon how long you have known the man in question, whether you are his fiancée. If he is just an acquaintance of many years, a book stationery, or some fine handkerchiefs, is an appropriate gift. If the young man means more than that to you and if he has given you expensive presents, you might buy him a cigar case, cuff links, gloves or traveling case. You are the one who would know just what the young man already has of personal property. Be sure that you are indebted to this man or that you are really in a position to give him a present before you do so. No girl should embarrass a man by a gift that she has no reason for giving to him.

Dinner Christmas Night.
