

Fatal Asylum Fire Is Probed

17 Insane Patients Dead, 12 Still at Large After Chicago Blaze.

By International News Service.
Chicago, Dec. 27.—Five city, state and federal agencies today launched a joint inquiry into the disastrous fire at the Chicago State Hospital for the Insane, at Dunning, which last night took a toll of at least 17 lives and loosed 30 or more dangerously insane patients as a menace to the city.

Fire hazard in the over-crowded frame structure known as "the death house" has been recognized as an ever-present danger for the last 11 years and the asylum had been saved from destruction by flames largely by luck in eight blazes since 1910.

By Associated Press.
Chicago, Dec. 27.—Seventeen persons were killed last night when a swiftly spreading fire of unascertained origin destroyed an old wooden pavilion known as the "death house" at Dunning, at the northwestern edge of Chicago. Fourteen of the dead are known to have been patients in various stages of insanity.

Others were E. J. Caraker and his wife, attendants, and Lowell, their 8-year-old son.

Only one patient has been identified. The bodies of the others were burned beyond recognition.

About 35 of the patients, including several of a violent type, broke away in the excitement of herding from the 500 inmates from the danger zone. Several were taken back to the institution after hard struggles with the police.

A dozen supposedly dangerous patients were reported still at large early today.

Great Burst of Flames

It was one of the worst institutional fires in Illinois' history. The building, witnesses said, seemed to go up in one great burst of flame. It was given the name "death house" when it was the property of Cook county because of its flimsy construction, it is said. It houses approximately 600 patients suffering with the milder forms of insanity.

The institution houses approximately 3,500 patients, and the fire broke out in the building of the insane. Attendants battled to drive them back from doors and windows and to safety while the flames consumed the wooden structure. The series of the charges led to the building housing the more dangerous patients excited them all the more, and for an hour the scene was truly one of bedlam.

It was thought at first that all persons had been taken alive from the burned building and it was only when firemen began exploring the smoldering ruins that the first body was found.

Break from Ties

Some of the patients broke from the lines being herded to safety and dashed back into the flames to obtain Christmas presents and other possessions, but it was thought all again had been brought out. Three patients locked themselves in a closet and were saved, fighting, by policemen. There were a number of other heroic rescues by the police attendants.

Blame for the deaths in the flimsy building will be fixed by a joint investigation of five official agencies working with Oscar Wolff, Cook county coroner.

The institution recently had been crowded beyond its limits by an influx of patients from the county courts, psychopathic hospital, and from other county institutions.

The Dunning asylum has had, including that of last night, eight fires since March, 1910, but none of the others were of any serious consequence.

New York —Day by Day—

By O. O. MINTYRE
Ft. Worth, Tex., Dec. 27.—Ft. Worth is known to Texans as the "cultural cow town." It has a distinct personality. Cattle raising is the main industry. The easterner might think of a "cow town" as wild and woolly. Ft. Worth is as effete in many ways as Boston.

Still there are no Mrs. Business men are not found "in conference." Head waiters wear business suits yet there is purer fiction here than one finds in New York. Newspapers play up educational news and there is a keen thirst for good music and good books.

You can point to almost anyone in Ft. Worth who didn't have a suit 10 years ago but who now has a palatial residence and all that goes with it. There is a robust vitality about the city even to the whiff when you drive out to the stock yards.

You find men in huge sombreros like those of the movie cattle kings but you also find silk hats and canes. It is a small town suddenly turned up. It has the most complete hat store in America and the finest candy store.

Ft. Worth is not the largest town in Texas but the leading newspaper, the Star Telegram, has the largest circulation. It has also the finest and most complete newspaper plant in the world, for a city of the size of Ft. Worth, and has one of the largest radios.

What impresses one most about Ft. Worth aside from its skyscrapers, smart shops, magnificent homes and commercial bustle is the open-hearted friendliness. Its manner is all meliorism. Instead of throwing verbal handshakes about their town before the stranger they make him feel they are genuinely glad to see him. Their slogan is "Where the west begins" and they live the poem by "making the handclasp just a little firmer."

Girls More Intelligent Than Men, Test at Harvard Shows

By Associated Press.
Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 27.—In a series of intelligence tests given to 107 Harvard students and 37 girl undergraduates at Radcliffe, the girls won a ranking 45 per cent higher than the college men, according to figures made public by Dr. A. A. Roback, Harvard psychologist. In the tests devised by Dr. Roback and carried out in the Harvard psychological laboratory under the supervision of H. S. Langfeldt, professor of psychology, the girls received an average rating of 55 per cent and the men 50.5.

The testing system was based on relative speed in observation, deduction, mental application and interpretation. One Harvard man tied with a

Kentucky Pistol Fights Continue

Close Friends Are Last Two Men to Fall in Forty-Eight Hours.

Duane, Ky., Dec. 27.—John Godsey was shot and killed instantly last night in a pistol fight staged in a barber shop operated here by Joseph Turner. Godsey is said to have entered Turner's shop and opened fire at such close range that the burning powder from his weapon set fire to Turner's clothes. Turner, however, was able to obtain a wounding and Godsey was slain in the ensuing exchange of bullets. The two men were said to have been close friends.

Death of Godsey brought to six the number of men who have died "with their boots on" in Perry county in a series of gun fights in the last 48 hours.

Jerry Dunn, mountain storekeeper who died in a Hazard hospital yesterday, was the fifth victim. He died of wounds received at the same time as J. D. Mathews, a barber, and Lester Hays, a miner, were killed. These men all inside Dunn's store, were shot by deputy sheriffs who passed the building when a firecracker was said to have exploded at their feet and they took it as an indication they were being fired upon from the store.

Deputy Sheriff William Smith and Dennis Phillips engaged in a pistol fight Christmas eve, during which Smith was killed and Phillips wounded.

John Richmond, 23, was slain on Christmas day when he was alleged to have attempted to enter the home of James Workman.

STELLA DALLAS

By Olive Higgins Prouty.

SYNOPSIS

Stella Dallas separated from her husband, owing to incompatibility of temperament, and her daughter, Laurel, 18, lives in the "cheapest room" of a fashionable boarding house. She is a woman of the East, where she passes much time reading, and her mother made by social leaders in the hotel. She is always smartly dressed when she goes to the dining room. Laurel goes to the same school as Stella and she leaves her at the home of Mrs. Morrison, where she meets an old admirer, Alfred Munn, with whom she has a musical fancy.

She didn't look pale and tired and wistful, the way most mothers of early '20s with their bright cheeks announced, her ecstatic manner proclaimed, "it hasn't made any difference. I can dance just as well. She and her partner had been one of the half-dozen couples still dancing on the ball-room floor to the music of the solitary piano at 3 o'clock when the janitor began turning off the lights. Stella, waiting patiently below, outside the ladies' dressing room, could not help but wonder whether the baby had slept through.

Stella returned to the arena of her ambitions with a determination to make up for lost time as quickly and as emphatically as possible. And Stephen returned to the valley of the shaming and burning of his shivering nakedness in his fortification concealed at the same time much of his natural comradery.

Impassioned people of Milhampton in mid-hilarities of whatever kind, in Milhampton, under the constant ban of his relationship to one who had been so often vexed. He became extremely subdued in manner, reserved, short of speech, disinclined to respond to friendly approaches, and in a word, he was called Milhampton, however, there was nothing glum and ill-humored about Stephen's manner. He was not a man of any remarkable more than half way.

His old charm, of which he possessed no small amount, returned to him shining and bright, and he was that he respected relationship to Stella. He bore himself with more confidence and effective self-esteem with business associates, and in the presence of friends, from Milhampton to know nothing of his home life. Every week or two weeks' absence from Stella became cases of refreshment, and he was not a man of many business trips, had witnessed the metamorphosis, and he opened up as many business trips, as possible, to his sister's protection, as possible.

Stephen's reputation for ability in the law spread.
The year Laurel began going to school, a New York law firm asked Stephen to become one of its members. Mr. Palmer advised Stephen to accept the invitation, and, in fact, not only a business loss but a personal loss too. Stephen had come to seem to him almost like a son. "Next go, he said, "it's your big chance, my boy, go."

It happened that, during the time that Stephen had the New York proposition under consideration, Stella was arriving on a rather more obvious flirtation than usual with a man of a very offensive personality. Stephen had told Stella, however, that the particular man was to him, but Stella had paid no heed to his objections; Stephen was always objecting.

The man's name was Alfred Munn. He was a stranger in Milhampton. There had sprung up in Milhampton an interest in horseback riding the preceding summer. The River club had filled its stables with a dozen or more Kentucky thoroughbreds obtained from a southern hostler. Stephen was somewhat of an animal for the most part, but they were safe and steady for beginners, much safer and steadier in fact than their owners' keepers. It was difficult to know which Alfred Munn was.

Alfred Munn became almost as much of a craze at the River club as the sport he pursued. It was difficult to get an hour's instruction from him, if you hadn't engaged it weeks in advance. He was busy every day from 8 in the morning till 8 at night, in the morning and children mostly. Certain women of the younger married set began paying Alfred Munn money to ride with them. It was a ridiculous attention. It was discovered that it was not only on the back of a horse that he was skillful, and the epitome of grace and rhythm; he could also excel on the ballroom floor. One of the younger married women, bolder than her sisters, invited him to a River club dance. He was soon attending all the River club dances. He was taken up by a certain set of women in Milhampton like some new exotic food.

In spite of the report that he belonged to an aristocratic southern family of reduced financial circumstances, most of the women who paid him attention were aware of his lack of breeding. They were simply amusing themselves. But Stella couldn't see why Alfred Munn wasn't a gentleman, she told Stephen. Other women like Edith and Rosamond (it was Edith and Rosamond then, instead of Myrtle and Phyllis) didn't seem to find anything so horribly objectionable about him. Why in the world should Stephen expect her to be so particular!

Stephen used to find Alfred Munn social with Stella over a kettle and tea-cups, in the living room, when he came home in the later afternoon. Stephen and Stella had moved from the apartment in a detached house with a lawn and garden.

Afternoon tea was an effort and affectionate with the most of the young married women in Milhampton, on those days. It was served on low tablecloths, before open fires, in overheated and underlighted living rooms, after the fashion of the custom, at that time, for the hostess to dangle a perforated silver ball, filled with water, and to mingle the dangle, as to the cream and lemon and sugar. When Stephen found Stella coquetishly dangle her silver ball for him, he did not mind. When she was ensconced in one of the big Dallas arm-chairs, it was more than irritation he felt. It was disgust.

Why, then, had she left the spoon in his cup? He had the habit of drawing air through the spaces between his teeth after eating! And Stella could endure him! Why then, he was disgusted in his riding clothes, his coarseness was obvious in such details as shirts and waistcoats. He wore conspicuous jewelry too. On his finger was a diamond ring, usually a huge gold ring with red, white and blue stones in it. Occasionally he wore a gold scarf-pin representing his wife's initials. He was that sort of man.
