Illiterates Traced by Club Women; Mortgage Burned

Of the 4,000 illiterates estimated to be in Douglas county 2,700 already have been located by the Omaha Woman's club and various educational institutions, according to the report made by Mrs. F. H. Cole, chairman of the education committee of the Woman's club, yesterday afternoon at an open meeting in the Burgess-Nash auditorium. The investigation has just begun, said Mrs. Cole.

Twenty thousand questionnaires, prepared by Mrs. Cole under the guidance of the University of Omaha department of sociology, were distributed through the public schools of the city. With the questionnaires were cards on which the children were asked to write the names, addresses and certain other information about any person over 15, who are unable to read and write in English, so that they might be given an opportunity to learn. The response has been a deluge of names, which have been tabulated and arranged by the teachers and returned to members of Mrs. Cole's committee. Not all the names are in the hands of the committee.

One school district reported 255 unable to write English. Of these, 159 were white women, 89 white men, six negro women and nine negro men. Mrs. Cole developed the child's motto sense so that now she can write fairly well, but she still has the greatest difficulty in reading. Miss Mary Austin, principal of the Bancroft school, set forth the achievements and services of the Omaha School Forum in the five years of its existence.

A committee was named to recommend to the board of water boards use of the lime and soda method of softening city water. This action followed a paper by Mrs. W. E. Shafer recommending the method and claiming that it would more than pay for itself in the cost of the soap saved, besides the saving in cloth fabrics, steam pipes and boilers, and kitchen utensils, all of which suffer from hard water. The committee consists of Mrs. Shafer, Mrs. R. W. Shepherd, and Mrs. Philip Potter.

School Forum Program.

The program was turned over by Mrs. Cole leader, to members of the Omaha School Forum Mrs. McDonald, president of the forum, presided.

Miss Marie Matthews, head of the Cass continuation school, described the work of the continuation school for children between 14 and 16, who are forced by family circumstances to work, but required by law to attend school at least part of the time. Children in the continuation school work 40 hours a week, and attend school for 8 hours. Most of them, said Miss Matthews, show no more burning desire for schooling than the average youngster of their age, and would not begin unless required. The aim of the continuation school is to make their classes so interesting and valuable that they will go on into night school when they are 16 and able to work full time. Co-operation with employers has met with considerable success.

Discuss Special Cases.

"Work for the Atypical Child" was discussed by Miss Durkee, who has charge of this specialty in the Omaha schools. Each child in her rooms, she explained, presents a special problem and has to be treated as an entirely separate case. People are often surprised to see the large number of pretty, sweet, lively children who appear in her rooms. Miss Durkee discussed the story of one very pretty brown-eyed girl of 10, who had been unable to learn to read or write. Examination proved that she had a defect of memory which made it quite impossible to remember the shape of objects. Having studied a letter, she could not recognize it, when it was shown her after an interval. After patient training, Miss

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

Mother Graham Decided Who Should Get the Children.

The women of our oldest division of feminine life, those who now are in their seventies and upward, possess a fortitude under grief and pain which, in proportion to their physical weakness, puts all the rest of us to the blush. I always dimly have recognized this, but I never realized it so fully as I did in the minutes that followed the return to consciousness of my frail and aged mother-in-law after her swoon.

Under Dr. Pettit's direction, Harriet, Lillian and I had worked frantically over her, while Katie and Mrs. Tier ran our errands, and Marion kept Junior occupied and happy out of doors. Harriet's face was set in carved lines of anguish and I knew that one query was insistent within her.

Had the news of Elizabeth's death meant too much for the over-strained heart of her mother? Was she to lose both sister and mother in this awful hour?

But finally my mother-in-law's eyelids fluttered and opened, and when she had lain in a motionless quiet for a few seconds, with her eyes pathetically searching our faces, she raised her hand with a feeble but imperative gesture.

"Doctor," she said, patently using no unnecessary word, that she might conserve her labored breath.

Thinking of the Children.

"Right here," the physician answered, slipping his arm under her shoulders and raising her ever so slightly. "Take this, please."

But she turned her lips away from the spoon he held to her mouth. "I want—those—double strength," she said feebly, but with firmness.

"Yes, I made them that way," Dr. Pettit replied, with a prompt mendacity which I did not expect from him.

She put her lips to the spoon obediently and took the portion he had prepared, then lay back upon her pillow with closed eyes for several minutes, while the physician watched her closely, and Harriet beckoned me.

up here and see poor William before he goes. Is he conscious?" "Yes and has asked for some of Elizabeth's people to come." Harriet repeated the message as I had heard it from her husband. "Edwin is going to take the first train down there. It goes late this afternoon." "Can't you catch it?" Harriet looked dubiously at Dr. Pettit and me.

The Children Unhurt.

"Were the children hurt?" The questions came faster now, as the drops Dr. Pettit had given her sent fictitious strength through her veins. "No, they were not in the car."

"At a neighbor's. They have not been told yet."

"Then what are you doing here?" She turned fiercely upon her daughter. "Somebody must go down there at once and bring those poor babies
