Dr. and Mrs. Tyler Have Guests From Arabia

Mrs. David Cole, J. F. Barton, Homer C. Stuntz, A. G. Magnuson, Herman von Schulte, Kate Copeland and Dr. Judd met yesterday at the luncheon guests of Dr. and Mrs. F. A. Tyler. The honor guests at the affair were Dr. and Mrs. Paul Harrison of Bahrel, Arabia, formerly of Scribner, Neb.

Dr. and Mrs. Harrison, they told the guests, live on an island in the Arabian gulf where pearl fisheries flourish. They told of a dinner given by a pearl merchant at the end of the five summer months when pearl diving is possible. At the conclusion of the meal the Arabian drew from his safe a large red handkerchief, knotted into a sack, which held his year's profit, a quart of pearls.

Mrs. M. D. Cameron

Mrs. M. D. Cameron, Omaha, is a member of the committee directing the third anniversary luncheon of the Women's Republican club at the Waldorf Astoria in New York City this noon. A number of Nebraska republican women will be present at the affair, which is the first large political event for the women of the country this year. Mrs. Charles H. Saban, president of the Women's National Republican club, is to preside at the luncheon.

Adele Garrison 'My Husband's Love'

The Two Telegrams That Came From Dicky.

Over my mother-in-law's howled head I signaled Mrs. Ticer imperatively to send for Lillian, for I was much alarmed at the paroxysm of weeping which had seized her while recalling a memory of her dead daughter's childhood. She had borne up so bravely ever since the news of the awful accident, with a strength so unnatural, and a composure so uncommon, that I was terrified lest this sudden emotional breakdown might not prove too much for her weak heart.

But Lillian's face was reassuring, and when she had helped me to lift the pitifully exhausted old figure into bed, she seized the first opportunity to whisper encouragingly:

"She's all right. This is the best thing that could have happened. She was settling altogether too terrific a pace for her age and strength. If we can just get her to sleep for awhile, she'll wake up refreshed."

But inducing sleep for my mother-in-law's, tautened nerves was a thing more easily suggested than performed. She lay quiet, exhausted, but wakeful for several hours after her outburst of sob, and she began a restless tossing with an occasional plaintive "If I could only sleep," which tugged insistently at my sympathies.

At last I ventured on an expedient which at any other time I would not have dared suggest to Dicky's dignified parent. But her need was so potent and so great that I took my courage in both hands.

Soothing Her to Sleep.

"Mother, dear," I said softly, "don't you suppose if I knelt down here by the side of the bed and held you in my arms, you might be able to get sleep?"

Her eyebrows drew down into a scowl, but it vanished almost at once, and she looked up at me pathetically.

"You might try," she said doubtfully.

I promptly sank on my knees and slipped my arms around her, drawing her head against my shoulder. At first I simply let her rest there, but after a little I began to stroke her forehead softly, and at last ventured to begin a low crooning of the melodies with which I sometimes, in defiance of all modern child culturists, put Junior to sleep. Her face was hidden from me, and I did not know what success, if any, the Anxiety About the Children.

"There's no danger, as there, of their not coming here, after all!" Lillian asked, as late in the afternoon we sat close to the wonderful fire Jim had built in the library.

"What do you mean?" I asked, started.

"Laws are funny things," she returned. "The father survived the mother, you see, therefore his side of the family has the first claim on those children."

"There's not one of them would turn one hand over the other to aid the children or have anything to do with their care, if William's savings were not in question," I returned hotly. "You have no idea what kind of people they are. Poor William was as unlike—"

"I can guess their kind," Lillian interrupted. "I have seen them many times. But, unfortunately, the law won't consider their emotional reactions, not at first, anyway. Let us hope sincerely that Mr. Harrison was able to sign that will."

"But that question was one that remained unanswered for us during the remainder of one of the longest weeks I ever have known. A telegram from Dicky a day after his arrival in the Pennsylvania town told us that William Harrison had joined his wife in the other world, another day later gave us the welcome news that the children would arrive, with Harriet, Dicky and Edwin, in two days' time, but there was no hint of the question uppermost in our hearts, even though, at Mother Graham's behest, I dispatched two successive telegrams to Dicky, demanding a specific answer to the question."
