Danny thought of his adventures with Gray Fox and Yowler the Bob Cat. "We would," said he, "If we felt safe." Then he told Trader all about his dreadful experience and narrow escape.

"Don't mind those fellows," re plied Trader. "You'll soon get used to them and know how to watch out for them. You'll find no more danger in the Sunny South than you did up where you came from. As soon as you get used to them you'll find that you can live as comfortably here as you could up there. Now I must go about my business. I hope we'l ee each other often."

"I hope so," replied Danny, and he meant it. "Isn't he handsome!" exclaimed ing. Most harmless laxative for Nanny as they watched Trader disappear in the Black Shadows.

"And he's just as nice as he handsome," said Danny. (Copright, 1924.)
