poor Sidney Bush built his marble Cynara.

It made him famous, of course, and earned a place in the Metropolitan. To thousands who see this great statue there, it seems to be the spirit of the sort of woman who rises in a man's mind after a debauch, and makes him groan.

A few who knew Sidney Bush see it as a chiseling of his own tragedy-an image with the soul of his wife and the face and body of another woman. Everything beautiful in the life of Sidney Bush came from his wife, but as a man and an artist he could not admit it. His vanity drove him to a Paris guttersnipe, and he immortalized her fair body in his statue of Cynara.

Even that his wife could understand though it put her on the rack of jealousy.

Mary Roberts Rinchart, always writing effectively and to the point, tells the story of Sidney Bush and his Cynara in MARCH Hearst's International: Every woman reading it will recognize a little of Sidney Bush in the man closest to her. It shows an infinite understanding of the sacrifice and suffering a man's vanity can cause a woman. It is typical of the only magazine that seeks education and entertainment in thrilling subjects -Hearst's International.

... Another story as stimulating as Mary Roberts Rinchart's is William J. Locke's story of the loves and hates of primitive people, called "As It Was in the Beginning." And equally entertaining, A. E. W. Mason's new detective novel, beginning in MARCH Hearst's International.

...In an article, as interesting as fiction, Thomas Edison answers the question "Do we live again?" He believes the cells of which we are made live forever.

...Gifford Pinchot, in another article, tells how the Coal Barons are gouging us by taking more than three times the pre-war margin as their profit.

... "The Mouse that Frightens Hughes" gives the facts about the Reds in America .... facts that show how timid and shallow our Politicians often are.

... There is more fiction by Montague Glass, Peter Clark Macfarlane, H. G. Wells, Peter B. Kyne, Kathleen Norris, and others.

...Louis R. Glavis telling more about the Klan's substitution of its own rule for the rule of elected representatives; the intimacies of Mary Garden; A Jersey Town All Jews; 25 outstanding features in all complete the only magazine that gives fiction as stimulating as articles and articles as interesting as the best fiction of the day.
