

America Ruled by Committees of U. S. Senate

—Wydé Denby

Brother of Former Naval Secretary Scores Methods of Investigators—“Give Accused No Chance.”

“America is now being governed by self-appointed committees of the senate.” In this terse fashion Wyde Denby of Chicago, brother of the former secretary of the navy, Edwin Denby, sums up his opinion of the oil investigation that has been occupying the attention of official Washington for the last two months. Mr. Denby was in Omaha Wednesday on business.

“My brother is a good fighter, but he is also a good sport and rather than embarrass Mr. Coolidge and his party he resigned,” he said, in discussing Edwin Denby’s resignation.

Mr. Denby was bitter in his condemnation of the procedure of the investigating committees.

Senate committees give no one an opportunity to defend himself, he said. Their procedure is to listen to everyone who has a story to tell except the man attacked.

Daugherty Precedent Dangerous.

“In my estimation a dangerous precedent was established when Daugherty’s resignation was asked for when he was under fire,” Mr. Denby declared, and his statement is almost identical with that issued by Daugherty following his resignation.

“With such a precedent,” it means that all the senate has to do in the future is to attack a man and he will have to go. Such procedure is all right with the English form of government where a party retires after a defeat in parliament, but it doesn’t do for the United States.

“How does the senate expect men of dignity and respect to serve in future cabinets when they can be thrown out by someone starting an attack in that body?” he asked.

“Look at the attack on Roosevelt. My brother told the senate that he was responsible for the Navy department; that he had signed the leases, yet Roosevelt’s resignation is demanded.

Oil Leases Kept Secret.

“And why doesn’t the senate make public the facts of these oil leases? As a matter of fact the government couldn’t today secure leases to replace them that would be as advantageous to the government as those with Sinclair and Doheny,” he continued, expressing the same opinion as Leslie Shaw, who spoke in Omaha recently.

It is Mr. Denby’s opinion that democratic oil investigators have hurt their party more than they have helped, by reducing the chances of McAdoo, their strongest candidate for the presidency.

At the same time, he anticipates the nomination of McAdoo at the coming convention.

Mr. Denby left Omaha Wednesday night for Kansas City.

S. R. ELSON SPEAKS TO COSMOPOLITANS

The Omaha Council of Americanization is co-operating with the public schools of Omaha to bring a better relationship between immigrants and modern American schools. The immigrants should get acquainted with the customs and habits of the American people, according to S. R. Elson, secretary of the American Council of Americanization. Mr. Elson spoke to members of the Cosmopolitan club Wednesday noon at the Omaha Athletic club.

The executive committee of the Cosmopolitan club will meet Saturday afternoon to secure a “peppy” slogan for the club.

Syracuse to Build Sewers.

Syracuse, Neb., April 2.—At a special meeting of the city council it was decided to ask for bids for the construction of a sanitary sewer system for Syracuse. The engineer’s plans are on file and the estimated cost is $40,000.

Adele Garrison “My Husband’s Love”

Why Is Dicky Unexpectedly at Home?

I repeated the words Dicky had just uttered, trying to make my very real astonishment appear even greater. At last I had something at which I could show disapproval without laying myself open to Dicky’s better that I was jealously suspicious of him. Sheer pride had prevented me from betraying the least surprise at finding him in the apartment, but this last piece of information, which my inquiries concerning Lillian’s small daughter had wrung from him, justified me in a bit of conjugal nagging.

“Not the first train,” he retorted sulkily. “I told you the 8 o’clock.”

“Yes, an hour’s difference is a great deal,” I retorted.

“Well, what’s eating you, I’d like to know,” he began angrily, and I recognized the premonitory symptoms of the temperamental tempest to which Dicky can work himself up when he wishes. “Is there anything criminal in my leaving the farmhouse and running up to the city? Since when have you—”

“Nothing criminal, certainly,” I interrupted icily, determined to make my point before he should work himself into too much of a rage to get it. “But considering the state your mother was in last night over the departure of her daughter and her grandchildren, and the fact that Junior was there without—”

“Any care save that of Katie and Jim, who have been with us since he was born and with whom you’d risk him for a month if you wanted to,” Dicky’s tones were elaborately ironical. “Yes, it is shameful. I know, that I should come up to attend to some necessary work at the studio before taking mother out to Harriet’s.”

He had the grace not to look at me directly while delivering this little tirade. He knew as well as I—indeed, better—that as far as routine affairs at his studio went he could attend to them all in the interval between the first incoming and the last outgoing Bridgemanpton train. His real work he could do just as well or better at the farm. It might have been necessary for him to come to the city, but it had been his own inclination which had brought him to the apartment and kept him there.

What was the answer to the riddle? I felt that it was very near me, almost within my grasp, yet strangely elusive. One thing I knew, although I almost had lost sight of it in my anger. I must not lose my self-control. With a mighty effort I wrenched it back, and even achieved a little smile as I rose and moved toward the bedroom.

“Pecavi, Dicky! I had forgotten about your going with mother to Harriet’s home.” No taradiddle there. I assured myself. The strenuous hours through which I just had passed had put that matter completely out of my head. “But I’m too tired to remember anything or bother about it, either. If you’ll lend me your bathrobe, I’m going to take off these outer togs and snuggle down for a nap before Lillian comes.”

“That’s the ticket!” His response was eagerly enthusiastic, although too much so, I told myself, although in the same breath I despised myself for my suspicious meanness. “A good nap will set you up. Here’s your bag. Is there anything I can get you?”

He carried my bag to the bedroom as he spoke, and took his bathrobe from the wardrobe. Then, with masculine clumsiness he turned down the covers of the bed, adjusted the pillows and switched on the reading lamp which we had installed when we came to the apartment.

“No, thank you, Dicky,” I answered sweetly, “unless you have a new magazine handy. I probably won’t read more than five minutes.”

“Well I have a sure soporific here!” he gibed, taking a magazine with a tinted cover from its bureau.

“It’s the latest blast from the jungle, so-called, but I give you my word I went sound asleep in 10 minutes, and I wasn’t tired, either. Don’t you want some ice water?”

“Yes, indeed,” and as Dicky disappeared with the drinking glass, I clenched my fingers into my palms, fighting one impulse to rail out at him, and another, equally strong, to beg his forgiveness for the jealous, suspicious queries that were crowding into my brain.

When he returned with the ice water, however, I had schooled myself into calmness again.

“Thank you so much,” I said with affected sleepiness, sipping from the glass he held for me and then snuggling down into my pillows again. “I shall be asleep in no time, I know.”

He went out into the other room and, pretending to read for five minutes, I switched out my lamp and tried to sleep. I could hear Dicky’s newspaper rustling, and once I heard him come to the door and look in at me, but I made no movement and, evidently satisfied that I was sleeping, he went back to his chair.

And then, low but distinct, I heard a knock upon the door of the living room.

EX-HOTEL MAN, 65, MARRIES GIRL, 21

Charles R. Otis, 65, 1812 Capitol avenue, retired hotel operator, and Miss Pearl Smith, 21, of Humphrey, Neb., were married March 18 in Council Bluffs. It became known Wednesday.

“We tried to keep our wedding secret, because of the difference in our ages,” Otis said, “we are both fond of each other and expect to be happy.”

“Money has a great deal to do with happiness, and young women nowadays marry to get a home, no question about that.”

Since their marriage the couple has been living at the La Verna apartments. Otis’s daughter, Edna, 24, by his first marriage, lives with her father, while his son, C. Wilbur Otis, a salesman, lives at 1810 Capitol avenue.

Sturgis Has No Empty Houses

Sturgis, S. D., April 2.—Every dwelling and business place in this city has been continuously occupied during the last two years, according to records of the Sturgis Commercial club, whose members forecast for 1924 the beginning of a period of rapid growth.

“Citizens are casting about for the best plan of expansion.”

Diseases traced to constipation are many —get permanent relief with Kellogg’s Bran

Why does constipation breed other diseases? Because it floods your system with dangerous poisons. And the longer you suffer, the more poisons accumulate. That is why constipation should be relieved at once.

Doctors recommend Kellogg’s Bran, cooked and krumbled. They know it brings results because it is ALL bran. And only ALL bran can be 100 per cent effective in relieving constipation.

ALL bran — Kellogg’s — sweeps, cleans and purifies the intestine. It acts as nature acts. It makes the intestine function naturally and regularly. If eaten regularly, it will bring permanent relief in the most chronic cases of constipation—is guaranteed to do so or your grocer returns your money.

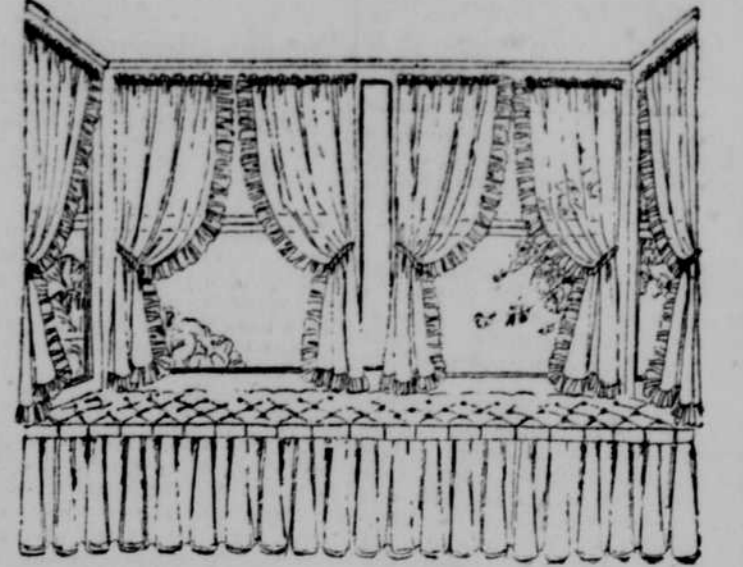

Eat at least two tablespoonfuls daily—in chronic cases, with every meal. You will like the wonderful Kellogg flavor—so crisp and nut-like—so different from ordinary bran, which are most unpalatable.

Eat Kellogg’s Bran, cooked and krumbled, with milk or cream. Sprinkle it over other cereals. Cook it with hot cereals. And by all means try it in the recipes given on every package.

Kellogg’s Bran, cooked and krumbled, made in Battle Creek, is served in individual packages by the leading hotels and restaurants. Sold by all grocers.
