Leap Year Troubles

By Martha Allen

I have a boy friend with whom I've gone quite steadily for three years. The last week or two we've been on the outs. He tells everyone a different reason but although he laughs at me I think he still cares for me. I feel I acted a trifle hasty. Should I tell him this or should I let him come back on his own accord? I think he will but not for a while as he is so proud in that way and oh, how I miss him.

BOBBY C.

If a girl goes to a leap year dance where the girls are supposed to pay and ask for dances, she should carry out the plans and the spirit of the affair or stay at home. I don't blame you for not wanting to ask boys to dance with you. One way to avoid it is not to go to this party. Leap year parties are only fun when they are well planned and carried out in a way that will protect the girls from real embarrassment. Girls instinctively prefer that the boys be aggressive and men themselves would rather have it that way.

If you were afraid to your boy friend, I think a lot of apologies would be in good taste. Otherwise, have the boys for dances and most of us hate to do this as none of us are good dancers. Should we do it anyway or let them ask us? There are only one or two that I've got the nerve to ask. Should I go ahead and enjoy myself and ask them?

It's great for growing boys who use up energy as an engine uses steam. With milk or cream, a fine body-fuel. Makes vim and vigor.
