

Bids Are Asked on Completion of Medic Building

New Plans Provided for "L" Shaped Building to Be Less Than 16 Stories; Cost $400,000.

An advertisement for bids for the completion of the Medical Arts building at a cost of about $400,000 indicates that a wing of the building is to be sacrificed, according to those who have managed to keep in touch with the hectic history of the project.

To finish the building, according to original plans and specifications of the Omaha architects, would cost something like $900,000, estimates have it.

Hence this advertisement for bids to be submitted this month, is taken as an indication that the southeast quarter of the building is not to be completed, and that less than 16 stories will be built.

That one or two Omaha men holding liens on the unfinished structure may object to this plan is an eventuality, which may reach the courts. One lienholder pointed out that pictures of the structure used in floating bonds did not reveal the section which is apparently to be left out, because the pictures were taken from the northwest.

Should these plausible conjectures on plans for completion of the project be born out, the building will be "L" shaped, instead of rectangular, as the framework is now placed.

The call for bids lists Madison-Kedzie State bank, care of Benjamin Culp of Chicago as owner, and W. C. Crosby, care of Madison-Kedzie State bank as architect.

Kansas City, May 4.—The strike of approximately 40,000 coal miners in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas has been settled here and the miners will return to work May 5.

W. L. A. Johnson, general commissioner of the Southwestern Interstate Coal Operators' association, said:

The new contract, carrying a renewal of the 1923 basic wage scale, is effective for three years from last April 1.

Girl Bandit Uses Scream Instead of Gun; Takes $23 From Gullible Youth

Threat of "Making a Fuss" on Crowded Street Terrifies Lad, Who "Hands It Over;" "She Had a Cinch," Says Woman. . . .

By A. J. LORENZ, Universal Service Staff Correspondent. Chicago, May 4.—A new type of woman bandit, armed with the most deadly weapon of her sex, has made her appearance.

She is the "scream bandit," whose depredations came to light when Harold Brophy, a 19-year-old clerk, told how he had been held up by a pretty girl on a crowded street.

The concealed weapon of the bandit was a threat—to scream. Brophy was walking along Michigan boulevard when a pretty girl stepped up to him and whispered:

"Hand over your money or I'll scream!" In a moment Harold envisaged his utter helplessness. He handed over his wallet containing $23. The girl thanked him, smiled and was lost in the crowd.

Simple and Effective. The simplicity and effectiveness of the pretty bandit's methods have caused sociologists, criminologists and men about town to shake their heads.

Harold found plenty of advice and sympathy—but nothing more. "The moment a woman screams, public sentiment is on her side," said Dr. Emma H. Salsburg, noted woman physician.

"A man is at a woman's mercy when she decides to scream." Mrs. Leonora Z. Meder, prominent woman attorney, sees danger ahead for the men.

"What men need is a protective association—for men." "There ought to be more police-women and women state's attorneys to look after men's rights. Any woman would have known instinctively whether the bandit scream was equal or real fright.

"Equal Rights for Men." "Equal rights for men—that's my motto!" Harold is 19 and probably inexperienced in the ways of women, said his male advisers.

"The trouble with Harold was that he didn't think fast enough," said Judge Joseph B. David. "He was afraid only of making a scene. I would have grabbed the girl, let her scream and told my story to the judge."

His story would have found credence, Miss Madeleine C. Anderson, assistant state's attorney, believes. "In these days of bobbed-haired woman bandits and gun-toters, Harold's story would have rung true," said Miss Anderson.

Former United States Senator J. Hamilton Lewis would have "disarmed the bandit with courtesy." Courtesy Method. "Harold should have bowed politely, handed her his hat and coat and walking stick also. This would have disarmed and embarrassed her," was his suggestion. Louis Manierre, millionaire clubman and traveler, also believes that Harold lacked experience.

"I should have let her scream and told the crowd she saw a mouse," he said. "That would have got me out of it."

William Rittenhouse, assistant state's attorney, agreed with him. "I would have let her scream till the cows came home. Harold's fine wouldn't have been more than $23 anyway."

Dr. William J. McNamara, jail physician, and Christian G. Kresling, would have met the attack with their fists, they said. "I'd Dempsey her on the jaw and then call the police," said Kresling.

"I would have socked her on the chin," said Dr. McNamara, a bachelor. "The whole trouble with American people is that they set woman on a pedestal. She is a goddess and can get away with everything."

"The girl was clever," they chorused. There were half a dozen good tunes in the score of the "Wishing Ring"—and given an orchestra to play the score and some stage props capable of walking across the stage without knocking down the scenery it would have been a smooth, fast moving production. Also lacking was an electrician capable of catching the proper cues for lights.

Prominent in the cast were Joy Bequist, of Nebraska football fame; Glen Mincer, Jack Johnson, James Owens, Carol Kingsbury, Orville Andrews, Ed Kelly, Marguerite Munger, C. L. Coombs, Harold Felton, George Turner, Joe Piser, Art Letta, Harriet Klotz, Pauline Barber, William Bradley, Lewis Hastings, Harriet Cruise, Vivian Robertson, Mary Yahrff, Donna Gustin, Herbert Yenno, Elsie Eberday, Clarence Gittings, Helen Cowan, Neva Jones and Betty Raymond.

The play was written by Cyril L. Coombs, and Miss Rosanna Williams was at the piano. The committee on college night were Isabel Shukert, Louisa Mae Williams, Mrs. John Barton, Miss Henrietta Medlar and Miss Sara Sears. Officers of the college club were Mrs. William Locke, Miss Nell Ridenbaugh, Mrs. Fred Hill and Miss Beas Shackell.

G. O. P. STANDS BY MELLON PLAN Washington, May 4.—Republicans stood by the Mellon plan Saturday in the opening skirmish in the senate fight on income tax rate reductions in the revenue bill when the democratic attack was led by Senator Simmons, North Carolina. Senator McLean, Connecticut, the republican spokesman, conceded, however, he was fighting a losing battle.

Many of the vital provisions of the Mellon proposal already had been repudiated by the senate, Senator McLean said, and he added that in the face of the democratic conference approval of the Simmons plan "it is a sheer waste of time to be arguing the normal and surtax rate reductions."

Senator Simmons assailed as "unfair and discriminatory" the Mellon rates providing for a reduction in the maximum surtax rate from 50 to 25 per cent and reinserted in the bill by finance committee republicans.

MAN IN LIFE BELT BATTLES SHARKS New York, May 4.—To the list of plain men made heroes by caprice of the sea has been added the name of Clarence L. Staden, erstwhile able seaman on the tanker Frederick W. Weller, which arrived this morning from Panama.

Staden, adrift in a life belt in the gulf of Panama, alone except for sharks, fought the man-eaters for 23 hours with the long blade of a sailor's jack, until the steamer Dorset picked them up. He had eaten no food and had had no sleep. He was rescued unscratched.

MUSSOLINI SEEKS IMMIGRATION PACT Rome, May 4.—Premier Mussolini's aim in summoning a conference on internal immigration questions is to work out an international agreement for its regulation.

According to a statement from a foreign office official, two of the chief problems to be considered will be: 1. Restriction of immigration by the United States and the exclusion of Asiatics. 2. Possible restriction of Italian immigration by the Argentine.

Nebraska Co-Eds as Chorus Girls Afford a Treat

College Night at Gayety Theater Proves Great Success Despite Stage Hand's Efforts.

It was college night at the Gayety theater Saturday night, and if Tony, the newsboy peddling his merchandise five blocks away, didn't know it he must have been deaf.

To begin with, the show house was packed. And when a youthful Nebraska man stepped forth from his part to lead the cheering and began calling for school yells it became a big night for everybody.

Representatives in Plenty Present. Wisconsin chanted a football war-cry from a box; Kansas had something to say from the orchestra seats; Iowa was a bit bashful; Minnesota did its bit, and it developed that there were representatives from almost every section.

The Kosmet Klub players presented a three-act musical comedy, agreed to be. Probably no daintier chorus girls ever graced the well-worn boards of the theater than those who trod upon their last night. Nor were these youthful coeds a bit bashful. Even in the matter of displaying a bit of epidemic now and then failed to make them the least bit nervous.

There were half a dozen good tunes in the score of the "Wishing Ring"—and given an orchestra to play the score and some stage props capable of walking across the stage without knocking down the scenery it would have been a smooth, fast moving production. "Spirit Baby," Rescued at Top of Windmill by Frantic Mother

By Universal Service. Cedar Rapids, Ia., May 4.—An episode as thrilling as any ever enacted in the films has been written into the already dramatic life story of 4-year-old Vivian Constance Robbins.

Climbing 40 feet up the narrow ladder of the windmill on the farm of Howard Robbins, the little girl was espied by Mrs. Robbins.

Fearing to call the child lest it loosen its hold on the topmost rung, Mrs. Robbins climbed the ladder and snatched the child just as it reached out its hands for the whirling blades.

The "spirit baby" as Vivian has become to be known, is believed to be a foundling. Four years ago when the Robbins' baby died, the loss nearly robbed the mother of her reason.

A spiritualist medium predicted that the child, resurrected, would be placed in her arms. The next night a figure, clad all in white, placed a child in Mrs. Robbins' arms. She accepted it as her own and not until a year later, when the family went to California, did Mrs. Robbins become convinced that she had been hoaxed.

Burgess Bedtime Stories By THORNTON W. BURGESS. Think not in trouble you're alone. For none has trouble all his own. —Danny Meadow Mouse.

Jerry Finds Others in Trouble. It wasn't as if Jerry Muskrat had never had such experiences before. This wasn't the first time Jerry had lost his home and been driven from his castle in the bank of the Smiling Pool by a flood. It wasn't the first time unfair hunters had tried to shoot him from a boat. He had been all through this once before. That time he had been very nearly carried down the Big River. So, had as matters were, Jerry wasn't wholly without hope. He had come out alright the other time, and he felt sure that if he could escape those hunters he would come out alright this time.

The hunters had rowed away, for Jerry had fooled them by coming up for air underneath a mass of floating rubbish. He remained there until that boat was so far away that he was sure he couldn't be seen. Then he started to swim in the hope of finding something he could climb out on for a rest. When at last he caught sight of an old log floating in the water he headed straight for it. With a sigh of relief he climbed up on one end. He had been in the water so long that he sorely needed rest.

"How did you happen to be here?" Jerry asked.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Jerry as soon as he was out on that old log. He stared at the other end of that old log. He stared and stared and stared with such a funny look on his face. "I never!" he exclaimed again. You see Jerry had discovered that he didn't have that log to himself. On the other end of it two forlorn little people were squatting just as close together as they could get. Two of the most frightened-looking little people he had ever seen. They were Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse.

"What are you doing here?" demanded Jerry in his sharp, squeaky voice.

"If you please," replied Danny, while his teeth chattered. "We are trying to keep from being drowned."

"How did you happen to be here?" Jerry asked. "I thought you lived a long way from the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool."

"We did," replied Danny, his teeth still chattering for truth to tell he is afraid of Jerry Muskrat. "We never dreamed that the water would reach our home. It came so fast that it took us by surprise. We managed to get to this old log and climb up on it and then the water floated it away. I hope you do not mind letting us sit here."

"You found this log first, so I guess I have nothing to say about it," said Jerry, his little eyes twinkling. "I hope you don't mind my sitting on it."

"Not at all, not at all. We are ever so glad to have you," cried Danny.

This wasn't quite true, Danny was afraid, very much afraid that Jerry might be hungry enough to think that a dinner of fat Meadow Mouse was just what he wanted. This being so, he had to pretend that he was glad.

Jerry understood this perfectly. "Don't worry," squeaked he as pleasantly as he knew how. "In time of trouble neighbors should stick together. This is a dreadful time for all of us, so don't be afraid of me."

"I'm not," said Danny, trying to make his voice sound very brave. But all the while his teeth chattered.

So the old log floated very, very slowly with Jerry Muskrat on one end and Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse on the other end, all three homeless because of the great flood; and all three worried and wondering what would happen to them.

The next story: "Danny Becomes Excited." (Copyright, 1924)

Mike, Elmer, Bob, Find Nothing On the eve of the city election, Mike Endres, sheriff; Elmer Thomas, prohibition director for Nebraska, and Robert P. Samardick, mobile prohibition officer, made the rounds of the city Saturday night.

They were said to have many warrants in their pockets. They visited 15 places. They found no liquor. They went home.

And so, after a lousie, they were like: Three men put out in sea in a bowl; If the bowl had been stronger This tale had been longer.
