6 More Days Have Gone.
Little News, Little Change.
Napoleon's Wisdom.
American Business Has It.
By ARTHUR BRISBANE

The world, another day closer to the day of Judgment or "the cosmic cataclysm," or whatever it is that will wind up man's earthly career, finds the news about as usual.

The Methodist church urges all churches to unite "in a war against war," but the church would not vote never to fight in future wars. When the next war comes, clergy men will be helping the sale of bonds as usual and going themselves under fire.

The socialists, now in charge of the French government, are seeking a road to permanent peace, and some solution of their national problems. They will still be seeking next week and later.

Exclusive clubs in New York decide to suspend their visitors' list during the democratic convention. This is presumably to oblige members that occasionally dream political dreams, on their own account, but would not like to push the thing so far as to "invite those political chaps to one's own club, don't you know." We really have an American aristocracy, a poor thing, but our own.

Mrs. Atkinson, who married two husbands, says a triangle is no geometrical figure for a lady desiring peace. The second husband pleases her, but she wants to leave, using No. 1 as an excuse.

The lady is referred to chapter 29, page 107 of the third fat volume of Westermarck's history of human marriage. It's the chapter on polyandry, a word taken from the Greek meaning "several men." If Mrs. Atkinson will go to Tibet, she will find one wife married to several others, or cousins, all contented. If the lady rejects Tibet, where the movie theaters and soda water fountains are scarce and inferior, she has her choice of a hundred places where polyandry is legal.

If she favors one husband in her collection, she might try residence among the Kaniagmiut, where "two or even three men sometimes live with one wife without suspicion or jealousy," but the second husband, (and presumably the third also), was only a deputy who acted as husband and master of the house during the absence of the true lord, and on the latter's return not only yielded to him his place, but became in the meantime his servant."

If one set of laws do not please you, you can always find a region where the laws are different. Before many years European capitalists will be coming to this country to become the great nation of conservatism, and homeland of entrenched capital. Live another hundred years and you'll see it.

A young person described as "General Dawes' assistant," says we have too much gold in America. It is our curse, and we should at once modify the curse by lending plenty of our money to Europe. That's interesting, but let the "assistant" ask General Dawes what he would do.

Dawes has gold, much of it, a few millions anyhow, in his private fortune. What would he reply if the "assistant" said: "General, your trouble is too much money. I know some bankrupts that owe you money now, have no idea of ever paying you, but would like to borrow more. Lend them a lot and relieve the pressure on your pocketbook." "I would not," General Dawes' favorite "Hell and Maria" figure in his answer? Why do financiers, sloppy sentimentalists and others forever advise Uncle Sam to do what they would not do themselves?

We ought to learn national wisdom from that wise republic, France. Consider what happened to the Vanderbilt boys, William K. and Harold, when they sold their father's racing stable in France. They got a big price for the stable, one of the finest in the world, but they were told by the French government: "Sell your stable, but don't forget that the money you get for it must stay in France. You must invest all that money in French enterprises, French bonds or stock, what you will, but it must be French. We intend that capital, once in France, shall stay in France, to employ French labor and build up French industry."

And the Vanderbilt boys did leave the money in France, for the French government knows how to regulate such things. It even collects full income tax from rich men, although it fears to tax little men too heavily.

With us, it's the other way around. We tax small business men, doctors or lawyers, wearing out their life and the bodily machine that earns his living, with no allowance for depletion, or for doctors' bills, to keep the machine going. But, the owner of a great coal mine, not doing an hour's work in a year, says "my mine is wearing out," and he charges off huge sums "for depletion" against his taxes.

American financiers and the government might learn from France that keeps all the French money that works in France. The man that bought the Vanderbilt racing stable was also an American. But when he dies and his heirs sell the stable, the money will again remain in France.

Commercial Air Fleet to Prevent Invasion, Urged

No Hostile Power Could Even Approach U. S. Shores, Admiral Fullam Declares.

Congress can not prepare against war in time of peace, but the American people can and will prepare against foreign invasion before it comes by establishing a great commercial air fleet, according to Rear Admiral W. F. Fullam, former commander of the Pacific fleet, in Omaha Monday to aid in developing the chapter of the National Aeronautical association.

The admiral has been giving his entire time to the association for the last two years. He has a set of motion picture films showing the progress of flying in Europe and America, which he showed at a public lecture at Technical High school auditorium Monday afternoon and at the Chamber of Commerce last night.

"Congress can not appropriate enough money to maintain a great army and navy," the admiral said. "The best it can do is maintain the most important branch of the service. And that is aviation.

Invasion Is Impossible.
"There will be no foreign invasion as long as we have an adequate fleet of airplanes."
"We can have commercial planes to be used in combat in time of war."
"Business men now demand rapid communication. That was the reason for establishing the air mail service. Commercially, there is money in air transportation and citizens who promote this industry will profit, while they serve their country."
"This association is national in its scope. We do not go into details, nor do we try to tell individual cities what to do."

Forty Members Here
There are approximately 40 members in the Omaha chapter of the association now. It was sponsored here by Gould Dietz, who is a past vice president and at present a member of the executive committee of the national association.

Rear Admiral Fullam became interested in aviation as means of defense the day the armistice was signed. His fleet was lying in the San Diego harbor on that day. The commander of the air field near there sent 220 planes into the air at once as a token of exultation.

"As those planes passed over my fleet, in battle formation," the admiral said, "I began to think. If each one had a bomb no bigger than a grape fruit my entire fleet would have been annihilated. We could have fled at 12 knots and hour. They could have pursued at 100 knots an hour."

"If we establish a great commercial air force all those planes can be sent to either coast in emergency and there is no power that could land troops or even approach our shores with cruisers through the air of defense that could be dropped on them."

WORK OF JONES RADIO FEATURE

To a Nebraska man belongs the unique distinction of being the possessor of both the bronze and silver medals, honorary awards given by the Royal Academy of Music, England. That man is T. Amos Jones, now director of the voice department at Midland college, Fremont.

Mr. Jones has sung in the Mansion House in England before such notable guests as King Edward, the queen of Rumania, the king of Norway, ex-Kaiser Wilhelm Hohenzollern, William E. Gladstone, Lloyd George and Lord Roseberry Gaegwar of Baroda. He also sang before President and Mrs. Harding in this country.

WQAV program Tuesday, May 27, will feature the work of T. Amos Jones, showing especially the fine quality of work he has done with the glee clubs of Midland college.

Burglar Alarm Prevents Robbery of Bank at Boone
Albion, Neb., May 26.—Attempt was made to rob the Boone State bank Saturday night. About midnight flashlights were observed in the banking room, and soon after the burglar alarm attached to the bank went off and aroused the community. Officers at Albion were notified and went at once to Boone (six miles distant) but were unable to find the would-be burglars. The cashier, who lives in rooms connected with the bank, was away for the night. Entrance was gained by raising a window.

Ingrown Toe Nail Turns Out Itself
A noted authority says that a few drops of "Outgro" upon the skin surrounding the ingrowing nail reduces inflammation and pain and so toughens the tender, sensitive skin underneath the toe nail that it cannot penetrate the flesh, and the nail turns naturally outward almost overnight. "Outgro" is a harmless antiseptic manufactured for chiropodists. However, any one can buy from the drug store a tiny bottle containing directions.
