Sitting Pretty.
Yes, We Have Snobs.
100,000 Men Discharged.
A Lady Vice President?
By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Presently Mr. Coolidge's convention will tell us who is to be the candidate for vice president. No news until then. The platform will be an elaborate amplification of the American sentence: "We are sitting pretty."

Republicans count on democrats, their wet-and-dry, klan-or-no-klan troubles, to make the certainty of republican victory doubly certain. That's their attitude.

You will get another view from New York soon. That will be a real convention—fur flying.

Have we Anglomaniacs snobs in the United States? Yes, we have. A Miss Green of New York marries Prince Christian Adolph Georg, son of Prince Valdemar of Denmark. City editors, who know exactly what the public wants, pay little attention to the wedding. If it had been an English duke, even of second class, the event would have been advertised 10 times as much in our pure democracy.

Workingmen should note that in one state alone, New York, 100,000 men have been discharged from their work within a few weeks.

This bad sign, only temporary, it is to be hoped, demands thought. Leaders that advise workmen for the workmen's good will not encourage too many strikes at this moment. There might be too many employers willing to lay off men.

Mrs. Genevieve Allen of San Francisco suggests that some woman be nominated for vice president. It isn't necessary to say what old politicians think of that. Nevertheless, young politicians will live to see things in politics more surprising.

The time hasn't come yet, however, for, strangely enough, at this moment more women than men would be shocked at the idea of a woman on the presidential ticket.

Concerning the alleged new cure for cancer, remember that Dr. Glover, the discoverer, guarantees nothing, and regrets publication given prematurely to his work. There is, unfortunately, no ground for giving too great comfort or assurance to unfortunate cancer victims.

Their best hope is in the statement by the great surgeon, Mayo, that science is "getting close to a cure, and even now can cure 80 per cent of all cases if taken in time." Don't neglect a small growth, surface sore or persistent soreness, however trifling.

Agriculture department reports the worst crops in many years. That's bad news for those who eat the crops, but may mean better prices for farmers not able to make a living recently.

The Chicago Board of Trade expects higher prices for grain, and with the wheat crop cut more than 40,000,000 bushels something ought to happen.

Men that deal in money, as others deal in shoes, corn or tobacco, are amazed at money's cheapness and complain.

"Call money" was lent yesterday at the lowest price in seven years, 2 per cent. Gentlemen gambling in stocks could borrow more cheaply than the United States government.

Steel men are not cheerful either. Orders for steel are the lowest in 10 years. Unfilled orders of the big steel company in one month from the last of April to the last of May dropped 580,358 tons.

"I've Been Praying Something Would Happen," Says Widow of Burglar

"I Knew He Was a Thief But at First I Loved Him."

Mrs. Agnes Mansi, 23, widow of the burglar slain in an attempted robbery Monday night, sits dry-eyed in her cell at central station.

"For years I have been praying that something would happen that would separate us," she murmured. "My married life with him has been torture—it's been hell. In his good days he was wonderful, but he was a thief."

The dead man's real name is Jenaro, according to his widow. He is an Italian and was born in London, coming to the United States when 16 years of age.

Exhibits Wells. "I met him in Chicago over six years ago," recalled Mrs. Mansi. "I was a stenographer then. My parents are respectable. John was a wonderful dancer and I fell for him. We lived together for four years and were finally married two years ago. The last two years have been a nightmare to me. Look!"

She rolled up her sleeves exposing 12 or more identical red welts and scars on both her arms. Some of them were four and five inches long.

"He did that. Whenever he became angry he would slash me on the arm with his knife. If a friend told him that he had seen me on a downtown street, he would come home in a rage and beat and cut me. He didn't even ask me if it was true."

"At first I loved him," she declared. "I don't want to see him," she declared.

The Final Plans Made Before Leaving With Mamie

The actress made no comment upon the success in the tonneau, seemingly so absurd an adjunct of our trip from the farm to meet her at Patchogue.

Ordinarily, I knew her sense of the ludicrous, always highly developed, would have prompted some thoughtful query to me, but from my telephone message she knew that my need for her was drastic, and her quick, shrewd look at the girl, Mamie, beside me, told me that she also realized where my problem lay.

She devoted herself wholly to the children on the trip home, and they exhibited happily her, while I drove the children in the car. And all the time Mamie sat beside me, her sullen hostility so plain that I fancied I could feel it as I might a blast of cold air.

When I turned in at the gate I spoke to Mamie for the first time: "Go up on the veranda, to that porch chair, and stay there until I come." I directed, and as she obeyed I turned to the tonneau where Junior, with his arms around Katherine's neck, was almost choking her in the exuberance of his joy at having her back again.

Junior thinks swiftly. Katherine's face was no less radiant, although in her eyes I fancied there lay the shadow which I had surprised in many times, and the cause of which I inadvertently had discovered one night when we were taking turns in watching over Junior in an attack of the croup.

"Oh! God! My empty arms!" "I'm afraid I shall have to interrupt this 'petting party,'" I said. Marion laughed gleefully at the banal jest, and Katherine loosened Junior's arms reluctantly. My little lad looked up at me with dismay in his eyes.

"Auntie Katherine not going away?" he demanded. "No, sweetheart," I soothed. "She's going with you and take care of you for a while."

Remembrance of similar occasions patently came back to my small son, and his lower lip drooped pathetically. "Then you going away?" he asked tremulously.

I countered with a question which I thought sure proof against tears. "Don't you want me to get you a velocipede? How can I do that unless I go to New York and find one?"

Scale Breakers Desiring to Reduce Need Not Cut Out Candy, Says Doctor

"Sacrifice of Starchy Foods Without Reason," Physician Tells Convention — Carbohydrates Needed to Maintain Bodily Temperature

By Associated Press. Chicago, June 11.—Obese persons desiring to reduce do not have to avoid starchy foods and to eschew all sweets, declared Dr. James McLester of Birmingham, Ala., in an address before the American Medical association's convention.

"Such a sacrifice is without reason," the speaker asserted. "Carbohydrates are the chief source of energy for the maintenance of body temperature and, in overwhelming measure, for the production of work. Not only are simple sweets, when credited with their proper caloric value, of no harm, but when taken at the proper time they will permit the patient to rest satisfied with a smaller quantity of food."

"The extent to which food gives a sensation of well-being and satisfaction is called its satiety value. Meat has the highest satiety value of all foods. Potatoes are to be preferred to bread."

"It is not necessary to resort to a freak diet in order to accomplish a reduction in weight. Rational measures which follow physiologic laws, consistently observed, are safer and in the end, more effective."

daughter from the modern hurly burly as long as she can, the other the passionate desire to keep near to her the idolized child from whom she was separated for so many years, has sent Marion to school only at rare intervals.

Lillian and I, together, have taught Marion, finding the child's mind so quick and receptive that she is already advanced farther than most children of her age. But during the last year I have cherished the same thought which I knew, though unvoiced, was in Katherine's mind. Marion needs companionship of her own age, and I mean to speak to Lillian concerning it.

I respected Katherine's restraint, however, and vouchsafed no answer save a perfunctory: "Yes, isn't she?" to her broken off comment.

Then with a glance at Mamie to assure myself that she could not possibly hear our conversation, I outlined quickly to Katherine the problem that confronted me. Of course there were parts of the story I did not confide to her—Dicky's interest in the Marks' message, for instance. But what I did tell her made a breach in the wall of professional poise which she has built around her emotions, and when I had finished, her favorite perfunctory, "My word!" was electrified with general amazement.

Slayer Enters Plea of Guilty

Sister Begs Plumber Who Shot Companion to Accept Sentence

Frank Sanders, slayer of John Barnes on April 9, sat in District Judge Fitzgerald's court for an hour Wednesday morning while his sister, Minnie Reamer, of St. Louis and his wife begged him to plead guilty to second degree murder.

"I consulted all the big lawyers in St. Louis and they said you have no chance before a jury," said his sister. At the end of an hour Sanders threw himself back in his chair and declared: "Nothing doing. I'll stand trial."

Prosecutor John Yeager and Defender John Baldwin stood with him before the judge while the information was read, charging him with first degree murder. His sister had not yet given up. She stood beside him, one arm around his waist. Tears fell from her eyes as she spoke. "Please, Frank, plead guilty. It's the only thing for you. You'll be out in a few years."

Reading of the complaint was finished. "To this charge what do you plead, guilty or not guilty?" asked the judge. "Guilty," said Sanders in a low voice. His sister dropped into a chair. The judge will pass sentence Friday. Ten years to life is the penalty. Sanders shot Barnes, a fellow plumber, because of a quarrel which arose when Barnes was discharged.

Corn Prospects Improve in Southwestern Iowa. Shenandoah, Ia., June 11.—Corn is looking better in southwestern Iowa, having improved greatly during the last week. Corn planted late is coming up to a fairly good stand.

Agnes Mansi, widow of a burglar.

I loved him. I tried to make him go straight. But it was no use and finally I gave it up.

At first Mrs. Mansi denied being in the car in which Fox made his escape Monday night, but when it was discovered that she had a buchoast lodged in her back between the shoulders, she admitted her presence to police.

Mrs. Mansi will write to her folks in Chicago, asking them to stand the expense of burying her dead husband. But she will not look at him or go near the remains.

"I don't want to see him," she declared.
