Problems That America Must Meet in World

Dr. Gibbons Discusses International Relations and Suggests Some Policies to Follow.

"AMERICA'S PLACE IN THE WORLD," by Herbert Adams Gibbons, The Century Company, New York, Publishers. Dr. Gibbons has written much of both weight and interest on international affairs, both before and since the war, but nothing of greater importance to American readers than this volume. It is a sound and well-written work, as all the author's works are, and should be read by every American who cares whether his country is right or wrong. In a little over 200 pages Dr. Gibbons has presented, in simple language and with a rigorous exclusion of irrelevant factors, a comprehensive discussion of America's foreign policy, past, present and future. He has based his exposition upon the history and the peculiar structure of our government, taking into account its lack, up to the 20th century, of any need for an aggressive foreign policy.

It is quite clear to the reader that the very brevity, as well as the clarity of this book, is the result of years of study, writing and lecturing on international relations. Dr. Gibbons has made this subject pre-eminently his own, and the fact that he now calls for a long-sighted, consistent policy of aggressive insistence upon American rights and interests will have weight with many.

Dr. Gibbons is known as a liberal but he is now, at any rate, a liberal with a profound distrust of the chaotic world he sees about as a medium for international alliances by any name whatever. He intends his book not to be a plea for or against the league of nations, but his own judgment and all of his arguments are obviously wholly against it. He distrusts the sentimentality of league advocates, and asks a dispassionate verdict based solely upon America's interests.

The book reasons from the cardinal points of American foreign policy, its historic attitude on "entangling alliances," the Monroe doctrine, the open door, arbitration, the limitation of armaments; it covers in large outline a good deal of our diplomatic history that will be most informing to a majority of readers.

One feature of his book is the stress Dr. Gibbons lays on the actual underlying community of interests of all the republics of North and South America, and the danger and loss involved in a fearful attitude of the smaller nations toward what they too often call "the Colossus of the north."

He believes that we should by all means possible make a definite effort to remove such fear, and especially to avoid all assumption of moral superiority.

"America's Place in the World" is a book that will clarify ideas of America in relation to the rest of the world, whether the reader put it down pro-or anti-league—and that is just what Dr. Gibbons has intended.

Another weddin' has come an' went, another bobbed haired, social favorite has been gobbled up, another young feller has been initiated into th' Royal Order of Responsibility Assumers, th' whites o' countless eggs are gone forever, another jazz orchestra has cleaned up, another florist is pullin' himself together, an' another mother an' father are breathin' easy agin for th' first time in years. After weeks o' preparations, sendin' out invitations, ruinin' th' sewin' machine day an' night, havin' th' livin' room repapered, borrowin' all th' dishes an' chairs in th' neighborhood, polishin' th' nickel on th' baseburner, recarpetin' th' dinin' room, fattenin' a couple o' hens for a month, layin' each day's eggs aside, gittin' th' addresses o' relatives scattered all over th' world, practicin' on salads for days, an' havin' bride's showers twice a week since February, Lester Plum an' wife have final-quite a name, and had much attention from the sheriff and others. In time he comes to be foreman of a big court outfit, and neat but successfully killed the man who ties the rope around his father's neck, fully advising him why he did so and listening to a confession. Of course, he marries the pretty girl who owns the ranch.

A Book of Travel of Unusual Charm of Style

"IN UNFAMILIAR ENGLAND," by Thomas J. Murphy, L. C. Page & Co., Boston, publishers. This is a greatly revised edition of Mr. Murphy's work, first printed in 1910. The author has gone over it very carefully, correcting and enlarging the text, and bringing certain matters up to date. For this reason the book is of great value, even to those who do not know of England at all by personal contact. Mr. Murphy is a traveler of wide experience, as well as a writer of charm. He gives vividly and entertainingly his account of a 15,000-mile journey by automobile through lanes not frequently visited by travelers. This narrative is heightened by the addition of bits of local lore, historical items that are often neglected by historians, and the whole is profusely and beautifully illustrated.

Dixon Writes Another of His Snappy Klan Tales

Rev. Thomas J. Dixon has done it again. Having put the clan on the map in the first place, he now takes the trouble to put it out of business. In "The Dark Hood" (D. Appleton & Co., Philadelphia), Mr. Dixon shows how the clan may become an agency of great menace. He uses the original triangle, and carries a brave and chivalrous young southerner through a lot of perils, brought about through the machinations of the revived clan that rode with a dark hood instead of the white. Local and state politics run through the tale, and the spiritual clan is brought to bay in the end through the intervention of a regiment of federal soldiers, the colonel ly got rid of their daughter, Myrt. Th' weddin' wuz almost pagan in its grandeur, outvulin' any event o' like character within th' memory o' th' oldest democrat. Th' flowers wuz gorgeous, in fact, ever' thing from celsery t' toothpicks wuz modern an' nifty. "Did you ever in your life?" wuz a common exclamation heard on 'ever' side. Even th' bride's father looked wonderful an' happy, while th' mother, too, had thrown off her old drawn look. Yit, she wuz a trifle uneasy at first fer somethin' might happen t' prevent th' weddin'. Th' bedroom off th' kitchen wuz completely filled with presents. We counted thirty-two mesh bags, an' book ends wuz piled t' th' ceiling. Th' groom had a long talk with his mother an' father before walkin' out a big floral bell t' take th' oath, but showed no signs that he realized what he wuz doin'. His step wuz firm, an' he even looked confident, sayin' as a sort of tag to the tale: "There is room in this country for but one uniform, and I wear it."

"Josslyn," a Joy for Those Who Love Style

"JOSSLYN," by Henry Justin Smith, Cowell, Meade, Chicago, publishers. Comes a new contribution to the literature of the country from that little group of writers in Chicago that seems to be hopeful of obtaining the recognition of a new and quite distinctly different school. Henry Justin Smith, the author, is one of the editors of the Chicago Daily News. Mr. Smith is not essentially a fictionist; he is a reporter. For that reason this latest effort of his, "Josslyn," conveys the lurking impression that Mr. Smith has taken his story bodily out of life and that it is the faithful chronicle of the shattered ideals and illusions of one quite close to the author.

The story of "Josslyn" is not a happy one. Throughout there runs a strain of brooding melancholy which at times almost reaches the proportions of misanthropy, and when the conclusion is reached one is almost constrained to wonder if after all life is really worth while.

From the standpoint of style and fine writing "Josslyn" is a treasure and joy. Mr. Smith once wrote a treatise on "The Way It's Written," and in "Josslyn" he proves that he knows what he was talking about. But if you buy your books for amusement purposes only, or to while away leisure hours, "Josslyn" will offer little appeal.

Catholic Chaplains With A. E. F. in World War

Rev. Mr. George J. Waring, sometime chaplain of the Eleventh Cavalry, U. S. A., has compiled and edited a volume of value to those who will be interested in the subject. It contains a list of the Roman Catholic chaplains who were with the A. E. F. during the world war, whether the service was domestic or overseas. It contains the exact record of each Catholic chaplain who served. It should be of service to biographers and historians, and is as well a compact and authoritative encyclopedia of the work of the Catholic chaplains. It is published by the Chauncey Holt company, New York.

Dry Agent's Mail Flooded With Lists of Alleged Violators

Robert P. Samardick, chief of Nebraska's federal prohibition agents, is swamped with mail from all parts of the state. But these letters are not perfumed. They are from citizens who write to inform him of places near their home where liquor is sold. One letter, signed a 19-year-old girl, stated: "I wish you would do something for me. I thought when prohibition came my father would leave the stuff alone. But it's terrible when a bootlegger joint is a block from your home. Please save me as well as my father."

Why don't you close it up? The father is in the penitentiary. One letter gave the place and description of two stills in Sarpy county. The next day Samardick raided the place and seized four stills and hundreds of gallons of mash. Every letter Samardick and Elmer Thomas, prohibition director, receive is carefully filed after an investigation is made. "If those who know where liquor is sold will only give us description of the property, we will do our utmost to make arrests," said Samardick.

Another told of a mother who declared her son was "being ruined by roadhouses and other joints on the south side," while another read "I am a poor working girl trying to keep up my house and still mother can buy liquor at the 'Mad House.'"

Deaf School Commencement Annual commencement exercises of the Nebraska School for the Deaf, 3223 North Forty-fifth street, will be held next Wednesday evening at 8. The public is invited.

Mothers know a dose of DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN Will keep them fit

'First Aid' For Sick Children THE experienced mother is not alarmed when a child becomes sick. She knows that most of the ailments of childhood are trifling. If it seems serious she calls a doctor, but whether or not she calls him she gives, first of all, a good laxative medicine. The doctor would advise that anyway. It is his 'first aid.' Such experienced mothers as Mrs. Everett E. Hunt of Belton, Okla., who has three children and never any sickness, and Mrs. F. B. Kuklenski of Prosser, Wash., always give Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at the first indication of sickness. Such timely doses have saved them much worry.

Give Laxative for Colds Adults should have at least one movement of the bowels every 24 hours, and children two or three. Failure to have it means constipation, then headache, biliousness, drowsiness, lack of appetite. Give a dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at bedtime, and there will be health and good feeling by morning. A dose costs less than a cent, and a bottle can be had at any drug store. Colds and constipation come together, so if you notice coughing or sneezing stop it at once with Syrup Pepsin. The Meaning of "Good" All doctors agree that a thorough cleaning out of the bowels is of first importance for it removes dangerous intestinal poisons. They will also advise a 'good' laxative, and by 'good' they mean one that is effective and yet harmless. They know that there are physics that never should be given to children - calomel, which is mercury and loosens the teeth; phenolphthalein, a coal-tar drug that causes skin trouble; salts, which concentrate the blood and dry up the saliva. They consider Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin safe for all ages as they know it is a simple vegetable compound of Egyptian scenna with pepsin and agreeable aromatics. The formula is on the package.
