H. A. Wolf Company Rebuffed in Effort to See Florist Shop Prosper.

Leniency of the H. O. Wolf con overdue rent in an effort to keep going the florist shop at 210 South Seventeenth street, has brought questions for solution that would have tested even Solomon.

The florist shop was opened by C. W. Welsh, who for a time was successful. His health failed, he fell behind several months in his rent. Finally, because of his illness, he decided to give up and the business was turned over to L. Ackermann.

Wolf forgave the payment of $800 of overdue rent and Ackermann started with enthusiasm. The new management was also to make easy arrangements with Welsh's general creditors but this took time and he too fell behind in his rent.

Again, Wolf drew a line under the rent account and all things seemed rosy for Ackermann.

But then came a demand that could not be postponed. Walsh had failed to pay his 1922-23 taxes. The sheriff moved in, took possession of the florist shop and levied on the stock and business conditions in 100 stores whom fixtures to guarantee payment of the Hart-Flannagan company repre $72.05 unpaid taxes.
