Red Cross Forced Contribution, Says Farmer; Files Suit

Charges Committee in Cass County Threatened Him With Rope Unless He Paid $2,800.

Alleging that a Red Cross committee was too zealous in the rousing days of the late war and used threats and a rope in persuading him to contribute $1,000 to the Red Cross, C. Lawrence Stull, a Cass county farmer, is suing the committee members for the money. Trial before a jury began Monday in District Judge Troup's court.

The defendants are John F. Wehrlein, Joseph Johnson, Ralph Hynle, William Russell and O. Sandin, Plattsmouth and Cass county men.

Stull says the committee and others came to his farm June 9, 1918, while he was working in the field. They said they came for $4,000.

Says One Had Rope
He alleges one of them had a rope and that a threat was made to string him up if he didn't pay.

He said he told them he had paid out the money. They then demanded that he make out a check for $2,800, threatening to drag him at the end of the rope unless he did, according to his allegations.

Eventually, he signed two checks, one for $800 and the other for $1,000, the latter payable to the Plattsmouth chapter of the Red Cross.

Check Refused, Cashed
District Judge Begley of Plattsmouth refused to accept the check, but it was cashed and what became of the money is a mystery.

According to an answer on file, Stull gave this sum voluntarily to the Red Cross. His quota, as arranged by the Cass county committee at the time of the drive, was $70 and this sum alone was taken by the Red Cross, Judge Begley said.

Individual Instruction.

The worth of a school should be judged by the work produced, not by the "frills and fads." The School of Individual Instruction firmly believes that the fundamentals should be taught in a common-sense manner, in uncrowded classes of pupils with the same mental ability. Individual instruction allows more time for the brilliant student to gather cultural knowledge, as well as the necessary essentials.

During the summer school, Mrs. George C. Ederly, besides her high school work, is teaching the eighth B algebra and arithmetic.
