It's a Poor Officer Who Can't Meet a Situation

Western Acreeges Are Uncharted—Naval Officer, With Only a Speedometer and Wayside Signs to Guide Him, Gets Lost and Hears a Speech.

Knowing how to navigate the high seas is no guarantee that one can motor over dry land with accuracy as to direction and destination.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Frederick Dodge Powers, U. S. N., left Omaha several weeks ago to motor to the Pacific coast where Lieutenant Powers has been ordered to join the United States destroyer Mervin at San Diego. But western acreages are not charted to a nicety and the Powers had no compass to guide them, only a speedometer and black and white arrows along roadsides.

Their routing was to take them through Walla Walla, Wash., but instead of arriving there a few days ago as calculated, they lost their way and drove into Lewiston, Idaho, quite unexpectedly on Tuesday, June 17.

It's a poor navy officer, however, who cannot advantage by any situation. Upon their arrival in Lewiston, Lieutenant and Mrs. Powers discovered that John R. Quinn, national commander of the American Legion, was making an address in that city. The travelers went directly to the meeting and remained through the program, continuing their journey at its close, no worse for the long time, and the better by the vigorous address delivered by the Rooseveltian Commander Quinn.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Way Harry Underwood Staged Madge's Get-Away.

Harry Underwood listened attentively as I told him of my reasons for taking Madge and the fur coats to New York.

I saw both wrath and astonishment mirrored in his face as I talked, but when I finished, he suddenly threw back his head and gave one of his hearty, resonant laughs. I looked at him in resentful amazement, for, staid and stolid, had come to me near me for laughter, and as he caught my glance he sobered instantly.

"Forgive me," he said contritely, "though he could not wholly suppress the twinkle in his eye, 'but there is something a bit mischievous in the idea of a darling little Puritan like you trailing across the country with stolen furs and that platter-faced chimpanzee of a girl in your car."

"I fall to see anything humorous in the situation," I began, with respectful primness, but with his quick, sidling eyes upon me I found it impossible to remain dignified or even serious, especially as the ludicrous side of my adventure had insistently presented itself to me from the beginning. Accordingly, after a little struggle with my dignity, I found the relief for my nerves in laughter which otherwise would have come from tears.

A Sudden Transition.

"There! That's better," Mr. Underwood said approvingly, and I suddenly saw that he had deliberately staged his mirth in order to ward off possible hysteria on my part.

The knowledge made me grateful, and a bit ashamed of my pettishness. With a sudden impulse I held out my hand.

"I am afraid I haven't appeared very grateful," I said, looking up at him.

He took the hand in both of his and looked down at me with reproach, half-laughing, half-serious, in his eyes.

"How often have I told you not to look at me like that!" he demanded. "I warn you, there'll be serious consequences some day when you lift those long-lashed lamps in my direction, with that grateful expression on them. I know you don't mean one word of the words, say, but I'm mighty likely to forget everything but the look. So be careful. Have you any of your baggage up here?"

The last sentence was as prosaic as the rest of his speech had been romantic. The quick change bewildered me, but I was thankful for the sudden transition and quick to seize the cue he tossed me.

"Not even my purse," I responded hurriedly.

He muttered an expletive, then turned toward the elevator. "Wait here a minute," he said. "I'll be right back."

"The Chief" Gives Orders.

"Oh, I exclaimed with involuntary reluctance to be left alone again, and he whirled around with a searching look at me.

"I'm a fine thoughtless beast!" he ejaculated. "Come along, of course."

"That he understood the mecha-

ism of the elevator was plain, and in another minute we had made the descent to the lower floor, and had emerged into a large room lined with cars in various stages of repair, evidently the ostensible workroom of the garage.

A man I had not seen before was bending over one of the cars as if at work, but at our entrance he came rapidly toward us, and I deduced that he was Harry Underwood's special aid.

"Pete," Mr. Underwood's voice was genial yet peremptory, "go in the front, there and tell those guys to bring everything belonging to the lady in here, including that girl. Have them fill up her car and mine with gas, oil and water. I'll take this lady into the city in my roadster, and you'll follow just behind us all the way in her car with the girl and the baggage. I don't think the girl will make any trouble. If she does, just hook three times and I'll be with you. Tell Ed to come back here with the girl and the baggage. Make everything snappy. We're going to get out of here in five minutes or less. Put everybody on the job."

"Get you," the man replied laconically, and walked rapidly into the front of the garage. It was but a few seconds before Madge stalked stolidly into the big room, escorted by the man to whom she had waved, who carried the suitcases, one in either hand.

"I'll hold you responsible, Ed. If these have been opened," Mr. Underwood said sternly.

"Honest chief, nobody's touched 'em," the man replied earnestly. "I've had my eye on 'em all the time."

"That's a good thing," retorted Mr. Underwood. But it will do no harm to take a look, anyway. Or are they locked?"

He turned to me inquiringly. (Copyright, 1924.)

Your Problems

Martha Allen

Dear Miss Allen: I have read several letters recently in The Omaha Bee asking your advice about young girls going out with married men. One asks if there's any harm in allowing her employer to kiss her; says he loves her and she loves him, and it doesn't hurt the wife because she doesn't know it.

This girl certainly lacks self-respect. I wonder if she was married to a business man if she would want her husband and stenographer to act this way, and, as for loving a man of this character, a girl that could be lacking in intelligence. Does she think for a minute a man the doesn't deserve the name who would be such a cad could be trusted? If she wins him away from his wife and family she can expect some one else to win him from her and she would not be entitled to anyone's sympathy. Girls know that it is wrong to make dates and allow liberties from married men without asking, and every time they allow these liberties they put a stain on their character that will never be forgotten.

I have two daughters, and I would rather see them buried than have them sink so low that they would knowingly come between husband and wife. There are plenty of single men without the girls making trouble between husband and wife.

You girls who are tempted to do this imagine yourselves in the wife's place and look at her side of the question, and I think you will be disgusted at yours and the man's attitude. A WIFE AND MOTHER.

Bobbie P.

The only way you have of judging which girl this boy prefers is by the way he acts. Sooner or later he will drop one of you for the other. In the meantime, why don't you try to be fair about it. There is no reason why he should go exclusively with you. You are not engaged. How can a boy know what girl he does like unless he becomes acquainted?

Leave for Son's Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Booth and daughter, Miss Marion Booth, leave Friday evening for the wedding of their son, Edmund, to Miss Jean Hooke of Castine, Me., which will be solemnized the afternoon of July 5.

The groom and his brother, Robert P. Booth, who will serve him as best man, will join Mrs. Booth and Miss Booth in Boston, from Dartmouth, where both are members of the college faculty.

Mr. Booth, sr., will spend a week in New York at the convention of the superintendents for schools for the deaf.

Following the wedding Miss Marion will visit in Portsmouth, N. H., Boston and Chicago.

For Miss Harvey.

Misses Helen and Ruth Nolan will receive at their home on Wednesday, July 2 from 4 to 6, honoring Miss Jane Harvey, who arrives Sunday from Memphis, Tenn., to visit the O. H. Barnetts.

Mrs. Couch Hostess.

Mrs. Ed Couch will give a luncheon at the Brandeis restaurant on Thursday for the sister of Mrs. Jerome Stone, Mrs. Elgin Stone of Wellington, Tex.

Talk on Java at Club Luncheon

Mrs. George Magney, recently returned from a world tour, will speak on Java at the luncheon to be given Thursday at Carter Lake club by the speech education department of the Omaha Woman's club. The public is invited to attend, making reservations with Mrs. George Pray, Mrs. O. Y. Kring or Mrs. John Murphy.

Java is a remarkable country, according to Mrs. Magney, and comparatively little is known about it.

School Girl Returns.

Miss Ann Rosenblatt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris M. Rosenblatt, returned Sunday from Wheaton college, Norton, Mass., where she has just completed her freshman year. Miss Rosenblatt was especially active in dramatics during the year. She wrote, directed and took part in a Biblical play based on the story of Jephthah's daughter. Sixteen were in the cast. Miss Rosenblatt was formerly a pupil of Miss Adelaide Fogt in dancing. Her play was given in pantomime and dance.

Lawn Festival Postponed.

The lawn festival to have been given by Circle 2, First Methodist church, on Friday night at the F. J. Farington home, is indefinitely postponed owing to the weather.
