That Cracked Mirror The Chinese have a clever way of preserving their usefulness. Over the crack they plant the stem of a flower (if the crack runs upward), or a vine (if it runs horizontally), finishing with a bloom in natural color and conventionalized form or a few leaves. Albert Edholm confines all his diamond selections to stones of the higher qualities. Such an assurance is a very important consideration in the selection of a diamond.

The natural lighting features of this secluded jewel shop, wide north windows, which are high enough to receive the unbroken rays of light on the stones to be examined, are a perfect satisfaction to the purchaser of diamonds, an examination which assures permanent pleasure in the stone bought.
