"Stepping Out."

Chronically tired, aching, burning feet may be greatly eased by systematic care. Do not expect wonders overnight, however, but continue the treatments methodically as a matter of routine.

Each night before retiring soak the feet in hot water for 15 minutes, adding hot water as the bath cools. The simplest place is the bath tub, where hot water is available and no lifting is necessary. Dry carefully and rub with vaseline on the toes and well over the instep, paying especial attention to the soles, which often cause much misery. The massage will stimulate circulation and soothe the skin.

Have two pairs of street shoes, alternating each day. Wear lighter shoes or slippers in the evening and in the house during the day. Perhaps the day has been particularly wearisome and you dread the necessity of starting out again for the evening. If a bath is impossible, try holding your feet under water running from the tub faucets for a minute or two. Dry, dust with unscented borated talcum powder or powdered boric acid, and put in fresh stockings and change of shoes.

Be certain that your stockings fit. Those too short in the feet will pinch and cause almost as much trouble as too short shoes. They will also wear out quickly. Those too long may result in blisters and are vastly uncomfortable. Keep all shoes not in use on shoe trees and wash hosiery after each wearing.

Paris furriers are not very happy, for French designers have all but banished fur trimming from the summer wardrobe. Piano Lessons Special rates for beginners. At. 3778 or At. 4914.
