That's That.
Political Insurance.
La Follette Grows.
However, Don't Worry.
By ARTHUR BRISBANE

John W. Davis, once ambassador to Great Britain, now lawyer for J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., the greatest British-American banking house, is nominated by the democrats for president of the United States.

And that is that.

One interesting question is, what will William J. Bryan do now? It is his custom to speak frankly about democratic candidates before they are nominated and always support them afterwards. He supported Parker, although he opposed his nomination. Will he be able to support Davis now, after his statement in the convention that Mr. Davis would not be allowed to sit on any jury, judging a case involving the interests of J. Pierpont Morgan?

The other day when Wall street betting was 11 to 5 on Coolidge's election, it was said here that the odds ought really to be 11,000 to 1, barring the unknown quality of La Follette.

But 11,000 to 1 on Coolidge would be hardly fair, now that the democratic nomination has been made. You can decide for yourself whether those odds should be made longer or shorter.

Mr. Davis' nomination makes the La Follette campaign more interesting and more puzzling than ever.

Many farmers in the northwest intended to vote against the republican administration to express dissatisfaction with high railroad rates and other troubles. Is it likely that those farmers will leave the republican party to vote for J. Pierpont Morgan's lawyer, who inevitably will be connected in their minds with railroad management and rates put up through the J. Pierpont Morgan office?

Mr. Davis' nomination must mean many republican votes for La Follette that would have gone to the democrats had a different democrat been named.

If republicans are wise, they will do something to please the farmers. The best thing at present is to concentrate on better prices for farm products, wheat, corn, oats, rye, etc. Wheat prices went up a couple of cents a bushel yesterday. Perhaps republicans feel that they can now ignore the democrats. But they can't ignore La Follette and the only way to fight La Follette is with high prices for the farmers.

Luckily, the prosperity of this country does not depend entirely upon men nominated by political conventions. The nominee means sometimes as much as one per cent of the total. The people, what they want, what they intend and what they think means 99 per cent.

This country has one New Englander, moderate conservative, running for president. And it has a pleasant, estimable corporation lawyer, superlatively conservative, running for president.

It has in Senator La Follette an expression of the dissatisfaction among farmers and others. And at the same time it has in La Follette a man who has for real lawlessness what Wall street gentlemen are pleased to call "red radicalism and bolshevism," a contempt as great as that of any conservative.

More important than any candidate is the country. We have the world's gold, 112,000,000 of the best people, resources unlimited, only half developed, public schools that guarantee gradual elimination of ignorance and power in the hands of the people to do whatever they please, if they think it worth while.

Such guarantees make you feel that you need not worry about candidates.

The best officials and candidates in all the world's history could not make a civilized nation of the Congo region in 1,000 years. The worst candidates or officials in all the world's history could not possibly prevent the development and growth of the United States in the right direction.
