

All Lincoln Out to Greet Bryan; Parade Streets

Governor Has Difficulty in Making His Way to Car Through Cheering Thousands.

(Continued From Page One) with state affairs for three weeks" he said, "and it is impossible for me to express an opinion. Only one thing I am sure about, and that is that the committee will pick a real progressive. The one thing I am interested in right now is getting home and taking a good rest."

While Governor Bryan refused to be interviewed, or rather refused to say anything worth while about a possible successor, it was being broadly hinted by several claiming to be in the know that he was favoring Frank J. Taylor of St. Paul.

These same knowing ones insisted that J. N. Norton of Polk is out of the running because of some personal differences between him and the governor.

Kenneth McDonald of Bridgeport was on the train and admitted that he was in a receptive mood. Several of his friends insisted that he is the logical man because of the geographical location of his home town.

But the friends of John Hopkins of Omaha are insistent that he is the logical candidate. They say that Hopkins can take up the gasoline campaign right where Governor Bryan leaves it, and push it right along.

Other Omaha democrats insist that Mayor Dahlman is the man to pick. But out-state democrats insist that Mayor Jma would draw too much fire from the press.

And they also insist that no Omaha man can pull the full party strength, to say nothing of drawing support from republicans and progressives, and it will require a lot of that support to elect a democrat.

Tom Allen mentioned. Taylor is known to be a close friend of the governor and while the governor refused to commit himself he did say that Taylor is a mighty good man.

Taylor is one of the democrats who tried to pry the Sixth district away from Uncle Mose Kinkaid. He missed it by something like 15,000 votes.

Tom Allen, chairman of the democratic state committee and a brother-in-law of the Bryans, is being mentioned for the succession. But it wouldn't suit a lot of democrats who still remember that it was Brother-in-Law Tom who pulled down the choice plum of United States district attorney when Brother William was secretary of state.

George Jackson of Nelson will have some strong backing when the time comes for the state committee to meet and learn what Governor Bryan wants done. And with Brother-in-Law Allen heading the committee it is a cinch that what the governor wants will be what the committee does.

Judge W. H. Thompson, who has just retired as democratic national committeeman and sits upon the supreme bench by grace of Governor Bryan's appointing power, accompanied the governor back from New York. Judge Thompson followed the cue given by the governor and declined to make any comment on the situation.

Hopkins Supporters Busy. "I am out of touch," he said. "But I am sure the man selected will be a man competent to carry out the Bryan policies."

"This talk about the necessity of naming a 'dirt farmer' is all bunk," declared one Omaha man who is boosting for Hopkins. When told the indications were that the governor was inclined to favor Taylor he snorted with disgust.

"A fine dirt farmer is Taylor. He is a lawyer. What we want is a real executive who knows the people. John Hopkins is our kind. He can pick up Bryan's policies from the start and carry 'em farther than Bryan himself. Hasn't he proved that right here in Omaha? And isn't it time Omaha democrats were given a chance at the governorship? We haven't had a candidate for governor from Omaha for 24 years."

Chairman Allen declared the state committee would meet in a week to select a successor on the state ticket. When asked if he had any ambitions along gubernatorial lines, Chairman Allen emulated the famous clam.

Omaha numbering about 500 assembled at Burlington station to meet Governor Charles W. Bryan, democratic nominee for the vice presidency, at 9:15 Monday morning.

The governor was en route from New York to Lincoln. He stood on the rear observation platform of his train, shaking hands, until a switch engine hooked on to remove the car, then he stepped to the station platform.

There were no music and no banners at the reception. When Mayor Dahlman and Bryan mounted a platform truck someone shouted, "What's the matter with Bryan?"

The crowd responded that "He's ADVERTISING."

Lemons Bleach the Skin White

The only harmless way to bleach the skin white is to mix the juice of two lemons with three ounces of Orchard White, which is any drug store will supply for a few cents. Shake well in a bottle, and you have a whole quarter-pint of the most wonderful skin whiteners, softener and beautifier.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon bleach into the face, neck, arms and hands. It can not irritate. Famous skin beautifiers use it to bring that clear, youthful skin and rosy-burn complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. You must mix this remarkable lotion yourself. It can not be bought ready to use because it acts best immediately after it is prepared.

Prince of Wales Welcomes 4,500 Advertising Men

American Delegates' Cheers Interrupt Address of British Heir Apparent Before Convention.

By Associated Press. London, July 14.—A royal welcome was given to the 4,500 delegates of the International Advertising Convention by the Prince of Wales when he opened the official sessions at Wimbley.

In anticipation of the prince's arrival, America's 2,000 delegates were present long before the meeting was scheduled to begin. When the British heir appeared, wearing a lounge suit, a convention button on the lapel of his coat, the American delegates broke into enthusiastic cheering, stamped the platform and kept up their ovation for 10 minutes.

Then the prince delivered a short address declaring the convention open. The delegates loosened up their pent up enthusiasm, cheering for several minutes on the appearance of each speaker and otherwise surprising their English hosts with this introduction of enthusiasm into a convention meeting.

The Prince of Wales had a hard time starting his address, so loud and insistent were the cheers which greeted him. Eventually he discarded his prepared paper to tell the delegates that he had always believed in advertising, and in fact that he had done much of it himself. Then he said:

"I think it is the very name of the convention which suggests international interest in the subject. When I see so many people in this hall from every part of the earth, I am convinced this aim has been realized. You came together from all over to give and receive information and advice from each other regarding commercialism which is the greatest problem we have to face today."

Visiting nurses know the desperate straits of some of these little folks. And in all the rich there is no other established means to provide the little strangers with the milk that will keep them alive if their poor mothers can't get it for them.

The Free Milk and Ice fund pays the milk bills and buys ice to keep the milk pure.

Visiting nurses look after the cases, so there is no charge for the services and every cent you give actually buys milk or ice for little ones in distress.

Producers' Alliance Branch to Be Formed at Bloomfield. Bloomfield, Neb., July 14.—Many farmers and business men attended a meeting held at the city hall, preliminary to the organization of a local chapter of the National Producers Alliance.

Purpose of the organization were explained by Mr. Jella, organizer. The alliance is a price-fixing organization and its aims and proposals are to unite the farmers, country bankers, business men, professional men and laborers into a nationwide organization to determine the average cost of producing farm commodities, to fix a price on farm commodities based on this average cost, which will add a reasonable profit to agree on an orderly system of marketing and to adjust farm production to what the market can absorb at fair prices.

He stared at Black Pussy long and hard.

ed the chickens. He always counted them twice to make sure that he had not made a mistake. Of course each time the number was smaller. So far he had been unable to find any trace of the thief.

"It can't be Reddy Fox," thought Farmer Brown's Boy. "There isn't a place where he could get in, and I know I haven't left the gate open once. For the same reason it can't be Old Man Coyote. The only one I can think of is Shadow the Weasel. But if it were Shadow he would kill a lot at one time instead of just one or two. Besides, he couldn't carry them away, and he wouldn't if he could. Some of those chickens were taken in broad daylight."

Just then he noticed Black Pussy sitting on the doorstep washing herself. A suspicion popped into his head. He stared at Black Pussy long and hard. "I wonder," he muttered, "if that cat has turned chicken killer. She was taught when she was little not to touch chickens, and I don't like to think that she is doing it now. She could do it. She could climb over into that chicken yard, and out again the same way. She certainly does love to hunt birds, and it may be that she is catching chickens on the sly."

He bowed at Black Pussy.

But Black Pussy appeared innocent enough. She seemed to have nothing more important on her mind than getting her fur coat as clean as possible. If she were guilty she didn't show it. But Farmer Brown's Boy wasn't satisfied. He knew that you cannot always tell by appearances. So for the rest of the day he kept watch of Black Pussy. He was sure that she didn't go near that chicken yard. Yet when he counted the chickens before shutting them up for the night another was missing.

Farmer Brown's Boy shut the chickens up and went over to the doorstep. He sat down, and rested his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands. There he sat for the longest time thinking. He was trying to solve the mystery of those disappearing chickens. At last he jumped up. "I wonder if a Hawk can be the thief?" he exclaimed. "Why didn't I think of that before? Redtail and his mate are the only Hawks I was sure around here, and I am sure that neither of them would touch my chickens. I know they are called Hen Hawks, but they shouldn't be. If they should find a stray chicken away from the henyard they might catch it, but even that is doubtful. Certainly they wouldn't make regular visits to the chicken yard. But there may be another member of the Hawk family who is a chicken catcher living over in the Green Forest and I have failed to see him. Tomorrow I'll keep watch."
