Your Problems

Martha Allen

Dear Martha Allen: I am a girl 15 years old and am very much in love with a man of 17 years. We have known each other for a year and have gone together continually until two weeks ago when he ceased calling. I do not know his reasons for doing so unless I insulted him or hurt his feelings. How can I win back his love? ANXIOUS.

You are entirely too young to think of serious love affairs. In fact both of you haven't reached the proper age to choose a mate for life. Points of view change so greatly before men and women are 30 that it isn't safe to be so positive of love before reaching the age of 20 years.

As for making up with the youth, you will have to think hard over any hurt you might have caused him before making any advances. Many youths are known to have been fickle at that age long before this one came into your life so learn not to depend upon them too much for attention. Be indifferent towards his change of heart and he will respect you more.

Dear Martha Allen: I read about Celia in the paper and find myself in the very same boat. I am also 20 years old, not bad looking, dress well, work and live at home. But I am terribly lonesome all the time. All the boys and men where I work talk to me and jolly with me but never ask me to go out with them. I belong to a Sunday school. Could you give me Celia's address? BOBBY.

Sorry, Bobby, but no addresses are exchanged through this column. Sunday school friends and neighbors ought to give you a chance for making more friends. None of us are entirely alone. I wouldn't concern myself about the men at the office if I were you. It is always better to make new friends outside of the office and avoid "shop talk."

At the Field Club. Miss Norma Morford will entertain 12 guests at luncheon on Friday.

Never Wash Combs. Combs should never be washed. The water is apt to split the teeth. They can be cleaned sufficiently with a brush or one of the cleaners that are on the market for that purpose. THE HOUSEWIFE. (Copyright, 1924.)

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Surprise Harry Underwood Gave Madge.

At something in Harry Underwood's voice a warning little bell tinkled away down in my consciousness, and in obedience to its signal I smothered upon my lips the bantering reply I had meant to make to his admiring little comment upon my flaming color.

It was one thing to enjoy for a few fleeting hours this unexpected outing at Lillian's request, in order that I might find out just what was Mr. Underwood's connection with the bootlegging gang from which he so spectacularly had rescued me.

It was another, I told myself, to let my own zest in the enjoyable evening hamper my ability to keep the game of wits strictly in my own hands.

Harry Teases Madge. There is no man of my acquaintance quicker of brain, more fascinating or more disconcerting than Harry Underwood, and while I was sure that, as Lillian had said, he never would be "unmanageable," yet I was equally sure that, to quote her again, he would be "flamboyant, sentimental and theatrical."

Indeed, his eyes had betrayed his verging upon the second emotion, and I knew that were I to justify Lillian's confidence in my "ability to handle any situation," I must watch my steps warily.

Therefore I made no direct answer to his comment, but hurried out of our door and down the broad stairway to the first floor of the apartment building. But without actually running, and thus attracting undesirable attention, I was unable to keep ahead of my escort, and before I reached the street door his hand was upon my arm protectively, and his deep voice was murmuring in a tone, half bantering, half earnest:

"What a startled fawn—with the wolves baying—it is! Must great big man not say what is in his heart in first reel? Must he talk only about weather and high price of politics?"

The desire to laugh clutched me again, but I suppressed it heroically. "I do not mind anything save personal comments," I said, so primly that I did not blame my escort for falling back a step when we had reached the sidewalk, and taking off his hat with a ludicrously mocking pretext at respectful respect, heedless of the round eyes of the passing pedestrians, mercifully few.

"Why, good evening, Mrs. General!" he ejaculated, while I reflected that for a man who professed as he did to consider Dickens relegated to a back shelf in the literary ranks, he often betrayed his close reading of the immortal characterizer.

"Have you the Scarab?" "I didn't know you had arrived in our midst. If you will honor me." He gestured to a luxurious limousine, which I saw at once was no hired machine, and the door of which Pete, now most correctly attired in a chauffeur's uniform, was holding open.

I preceded him into the car, glad to get anywhere away from the curious eyes of the passersby, and Mr. Underwood, with a low toned direction to Pete as the man closed the door, went on with his nonsensical pretense.
