Guests Arriving in Younger Set Save Socially Dull Season

July is devoted to the social activities of the younger set, whose guests are almost the only inspirations for formal affairs. The rest of the social world is devoting itself to its gardens, its golf games and its foursoomes of bridge.

Halleck Rose, Jr., has Arthur Misner and Charles Palmer of Erie his classmates at the Hill school, Pennsylvania, as his guests. During the past week they have been honored at picnics and dinner parties, and number among their hosts and hostesses, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tukey, Miss Barbara Baird, Misses Harriett and Virginia Fonda, Miss Laura Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Trester and Mrs. Frank Meyers.

Thursday Richard Duff of Nebraska City, Mr. Rose's roommate at Hill, will motor to Omaha to take the boys to Nebraska City for the week-end, and next week Mr. and Mrs. Rose will take them to Lake Alexandria, Minn., for a short stay. On their return Mrs. Rose will entertain in their honor.

Friday Miss Berenice Maxwell will arrive from Kansas City to visit Miss Virginia Carlisle. A number of social affairs are being planned in her honor, among them a picnic given on Sunday by a group of the younger set.

Miss Maxwell and Miss Carlisle were roommates at Miss Spomer's school in Washington, D. C., and during the spring Miss Maxwell and her mother took Miss Carlisle to New York for a short stay.

Miss Katherine Dooley will give a buffet dinner Saturday evening on the lawn of her parents' home in Fairacres, for her cousin, Miss Katherine Frohne of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Wednesday evening Dick Stewart gave a dinner at the Country club for Miss Blufford Richardson of Chicago, who has been visiting Miss Virginia Barker. Miss Richardson left at 12 for the west.

Miss Beth Davies of Racine, Wis., will arrive Thursday to be the guest of Miss Almarie Campbell. Miss Davies and Miss Campbell were classmates the past year at Miss Catherine Gibbs' school in Boston.

Miss Eleanor Woelz of Grand Island, Neb., is the guest of Miss Betty Myers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Myers. Miss Barbara Baird will entertain at a buffet supper at her home next Wednesday evening for Miss Woelz, and Miss Janet Jeffries will give a bridge party at her home on Monday. Miss Myers entertained at a buffet supper last Saturday for her guest.

Wheelock Girls Hold Reunion in Omaha

Miss Emma Fullaway entertained 12 guests at luncheon and bridge at her home Thursday in honor of her guest, Miss Karleen Fox of Watertown, N. Y., and for Miss Julie Bill of Hartford, Conn., the guest of Mrs. Burton Howard, and Miss Anna Allison of Northampton, Mass., the guest of Miss Dorothy Lyle. All were schoolmates at Wheelock school in Boston two years ago.

Miss Ethel Fullaway will entertain at luncheon on Saturday at the Chamber of Commerce for the honor guests. A picnic will be held in Fremont on Sunday. Miss Dorothy Lyle will entertain at morning bridge and luncheon next Thursday at Happy Hollow club for 16 guests for the visitors.

Former Schoolmate Here With Mrs. Allison.

Mrs. J. M. Daugherty entertained eight guests at dinner Wednesday evening at her home for Miss Nra Brown of New York City, the guest of Mrs. Katherine Allison at Rosemead lodge. Mrs. Daugherty and Miss Brown were classmates at school. Miss Brown was a former resident of Council Bluffs.

Kappa "Rushing" Party.

A rushing party for Kappa Kappa Gamma fraternity will be held Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Eugene D. Ebersole. Bridge will be played. The honor guests will be Misses Ruth Grimmel, Ellice Holovitchner, Virginia Trimble, Frances Harrison, Edith Sadler and Marian Hoerner.

Miss Anne Donelan of Glenwood, Ia., is the guest of Mrs. Ebersole.

Dinner for Guests.

Dr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Lawrence will entertain 20 guests at bridge Thursday evening in honor of Miss Catherine Jenkins of Portland, who is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stone; also Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Worrell, who leave Sunday on an extended western trip, and Mr. and Mrs. Guy Hopper, who are changing their Omaha residence.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

Dear Martha Allen: My cousin is in love with a man who has lots of money. He is 10 years older than my cousin and I am afraid that he is only attracted to her by her beautiful youth. Sue, my cousin, is very capable, and should make some one an excellent wife. Do you think it safe for her to marry this man? She loves him.

CONSTANCE.

No reason at all for, those two not to be happy if they care enough for each other. Money shouldn't be a hindrance to happiness, it should be a help, as it usually is. Just because he is older is no proof that he is attracted by only her youth. Why not let them settle this all important question? If he is worthy of her choice she should surely be happy. He probably has honest devotion to offer her, not only material wealth. All she need do would be to remember that part of her charm that attracted him and depend upon it for her happiness.

Dear Martha Allen: I am a woman of 30 and never had any youth. Now I don't see any joy ahead of me, for I am insignificant and homely. I am not clever and am poor, so what attraction could there be? Men don't seem to care for me and I have never had a serious suitor in my whole life.

My life has been given up to my small brother and younger sister. Is there any help for such a situation?

DISCOURAGED.

You are all wrong to be discouraged about your youth if you are only 30. The best part of life is ahead of you, so don't waste it by sitting down with nothing but regrets. If you would be more cheerful, people would want to cultivate your friendship. It is your own frame of mind that is to blame. Even though your life so far has been an unusually hard one, it doesn't help it by making it more unhappy than it is in reality. Find an interest and forget about your troubles. You surely have some attraction, such as beautiful hands, one attraction you might have to its fullest extent and the unattractive features which you think you possess will be lessened.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The "Surprise Dinner" Harry Underwood Ordered.

It took me but a second to answer Harry Underwood's query as to where I should like to dine.

"I have absolutely no preference. I should like to leave the choice to you, and not know anything about the dinner even, until after it is ordered."

He gave a gratified little laugh. "Haven't forgotten your old Uncle Dudley's specialty, have you?" he asked, and I knew that he was as pleased at my memory of his ability as a 3-year-old child would be with the gift of a lollipop.

I hid a tiny smile as I reflected on this bit of masculine idiosyncrasy, which I have noticed in other men, especially Dicky. They are inordinately proud of some trifling accomplishment, and extremely modest concerning their real work.

"It is one of my pleasantest remembrances," I said, feeling that I spoke only the truth due my husband's old friend, for whatever dark blots there may be upon Harry Underwood's career they cannot destroy the memories his friends cherish of his royal and unique hospitality.

"That certainly sets a standard for me," he replied, his eyes dancing. Then he took up the window tube, signaled the chauffeur to listen and spoke crisply into the mouthpiece. "Drive to my best bet, Pete," he said, and I knew that purposely he had camouflaged the direction so that I would not know where we were going until our arrival at the place.

Fifteen minutes later, after Pete had given a really remarkable exhibition of his ability to weave through traffic, we drew up before the entrance to a restaurant which I knew at the first glance was of the type Harry Underwood likes best.

Flamboyant and theatrical as he is, yet the noisy and garish in eating places does not appeal to him, and the place which we entered, while luxurious and up-to-date in its appointments, held an elusive and delicate air of reserve such as a princess who was leasing her castle for hire might wear.

Harry Orders Dinner.

There was no strained and elaborate pretense that the dancing room, round which tables were set, was the heart of a rose or any of the other floral fantasies so dear to the hearts of New York bonafides. The room might have been the reception hall of some palatial home. A few really good pieces of tapestry, some paintings, which the knowledge I have absorbed from Dicky told me were not only valuable, but suited to their surroundings, rare, fresh blossoms on every table—each detail spelled culture!

That Harry Underwood was favorably known to the staff was manifested from the instant of our entrance, and it was but a few seconds before we were installed at one of the best tables in the room, with a good view of the dancing floor. A waiter hovered obsequiously at his elbow, and Mr. Underwood with a deft movement slipped his pad and pencil from him.

"I'll write this order myself," he said, opening a menu card. "It's to be a surprise dinner, and I don't want any unnecessary speech right here at my elbow, and when I point to an item tell me if it is especially good, or whether you would advise a substitute. You know the way I like things, but don't mention any names."

"Yes, sir. I understand," the waiter replied.

Then for several minutes Mr. Underwood pointed to various items, received the waiter's opinion upon them, gave several mysterious directions as to time of cooking and garnishings, and wrote the order, without my being able to guess a single detail.

"What Beverages?"

The waiter took the order, glanced over it, hesitated, as if surprised, then asked diffidently: "What—beverages—sir?"

Harry Underwood's face darkened, and his eyes narrowed.

"Do you see any written on the order?"

The man backed away precipitately.

"No, sir. Thank you, sir," he murmured and fled, while Mr. Underwood picturesquely consigned him and all his brethren to outer darkness.

"He ought to know with one look," he stormed, "that I wouldn't let you drink any of that fusel oil and TNT they call champagne here, even if you've fallen off the water wagon you used to ornament so conspicuously."

"I haven't even changed my seat," I replied, amused at the paradox which the man opposite me presented.

A secret king among bootleggers I had reason to believe him to be, yet he would not offer to me or himself drink the very stuff which he was selling contrary to the law of the land.

WHY WOMEN LOOK 60 AT 40

With dark circles under their eyes, drooping shoulders, a lagging step, many women of forty have the appearance of women of sixty. In many cases this condition is caused by overwork or neglect of such warning symptoms, as headaches, backache, nervousness, displacements, and irregularities which indicate ailments peculiar to women. If all women so afflicted would only rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound it would restore them to a normal healthy condition, and the premature signs of age will soon disappear.
