

'Other Side' Lures Motorists to Risk Lives for Trifle

Safety First Lecturer Says Psychology of Auto Driver's Mind Causes Tragedies.

Crossing accidents and the psychology of the motorist was discussed Saturday by F. B. Thomas, safety inspector of the Burlington railroad, Chicago, who is visiting in Omaha, where he formerly was personal injury claim agent for the Burlington 12 years ago.

'His car is about 300 feet from the crossing, when a passenger train whistles, a quarter of a mile away. Our driver hurries his car across and makes it safely, with only a small fraction of time to spare. It took that train only 15 seconds to run from the whistling post to the crossing, so the autoist did not have a five-second lead in getting across. 'Was he hurrying for a doctor? No. Was his hurry real or just imaginary? Just imaginary. 'What he did was this: He stopped on the other side and watched the train rush by. Seemingly, his hurry was all over. 'Why did he act that way? 'Other Side' Psychology. 'Why the 'other side' is such a lure to so many persons is impossible of understanding. 'I once stood by the side of a river and remarked to a native that it looked very pleasant on the other side. 'Yes,' the man answered, 'but when you are on the other side, this side looks just as pleasant.' 'The desire of many auto drivers to hurry to the other side of the crossing is incomprehensible. 'Maybe when we reach 'the other side of Jordan' we will understand better. 'If you wish to remain this side of Jordan, stick to this side of the crossing until the approaching train has passed. Mr. Thomas makes many talks to employees of the Burlington about safety. He serves now more as a lecturer than as an inspector. He also writes on safety first.
