Mrs. Palmer Working on Material for Woman's Club Musical Program.

Miss Elsie Simpson, protegee of Florence Basler Palmer, is studying voice in New York City this summer with Frederick Haywood. Mrs. Palmer, who is with her, is also studying and according to word received by friends, is gathering material for the music department of the Omaha Woman's club, for which she is leader. She will return August 15.

Mrs. Palmer and Miss Simpson have been enjoying musical programs in New York. They heard the Philharmonic orchestra at the stadium under direction of Fritz Reiner, guest conductor. Strauss' "Alpine Symphony" was the program last Friday night, the first performance of the symphony since 1914. About 150 players will participate in the work. Good seats are had for 25 cents or 50 cents, according to Mrs. Palmer.

New Orleans Guest of the Gwyer Yates.

Arthur Dunbar will arrive the latter part of the week to visit his cousin, Mrs. Gwyer Yates, and Mr. Yates, who will entertain at dinner for him Saturday evening at the Country club.

Former Guest Honored.

Mrs. Milton Peterson will entertain at bridge on Thursday for the guest of Mrs. Robert Turner of Council Bluffs, Mrs. Jack Griebel of Patterson, N. J. Mrs. Griebel visited here when Mrs. Turner was Miss Helen Pearce of this city.

Heineman-Dempster.

The marriage of Miss Margaret Lorene Dempster, recently assistant librarian of the Omaha Technical High school, to Paul Theodore Heineman of Plattsmouth, took place Sunday morning at 9:30 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Dempster. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. David Tudor of the Congregational church. Mr. and Mrs. Heineman are in Omaha for a few days and will reside at Plattsmouth. Mr. Heineman is a graduate of the Creighton dental school.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

A Quiet Sweetheart.

Dear Martha Allen: When you have a sweetheart you really love and he tells you he loves you, also asks you to be his wife, but you don't give a definite answer because he's so funny sometimes, you don't know how to take him, what would you do? Here is how he is funny. He has two sisters. I have two brothers. Mostly we all, always go together; then he hardly ever asks me for a date, just takes everything for granted. When we are together then, of course, he's nice, takes me every place and does anything, but again, at home he doesn't say a thing about seeing me again. Doesn't he care if he does or not? He says he sure does, but his folks are a bit strict and he can't go without his sisters, so—but couldn't he say something, why doesn't he tell me I'll try and see you than let's all go there or something like that. No, he doesn't, he's so queer that way, always leaves it all to us girls; my brother talks more to his sister about it. Yet I know he loves me. He's so nice always and never says some of the mean things to me my brother says to his sister when they get mad. I get mad often and won't look at him; then he'll do anything for me and how bad he feels and asks me to forgive him, but he can't break himself, though. What should I do? Why doesn't he try hard to be with me? He says there isn't a minute in the day he doesn't think of me. I know it's his nature not to talk over things much, for his sisters tell me he's always pretty quiet, even at home.

I know that it isn't that I throw myself at his head either, for I don't. Once I went with my other brother to a different town because, as usual, this boy hadn't said anything about seeing me, and he followed me way up there, although it was 40 miles. Of course he had to bring his sisters, but he coaxed and coaxed me to go back with him, bought me such a lovely big box of chocolates and I just couldn't refuse; but often already I did not go with him at all, and then he'd tell me how he felt, but he can't really ever say for sure about the car. This boy is almost 21, I'm a year older. We have been going together like that for four years. What would you do, Martha Allen?

I think if I really cared for this boy and felt as sure as you seem to, that he cared for me, I'd be rather glad that his parents were strict with him, that he was kind to his sisters and not too hasty with words of love.

You are the true feminine in wanting to be coaxed and reassured of the man's love, but that will come in time if your friendship grows.

You might suggest, tactfully, some time, that you like to know when to expect him, or that you like to plan your engagements ahead. It isn't quite fair to a girl when a boy takes her time for granted. But I do not think it is carelessness in this boy's case so much as it is bashfulness.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Cool "Thrust" Harry Underwood Gave Madge.

Harry Underwood's warning message to Lillian concerning the matter of the furs so coincided with my own feelings on the subject that I stared at him frankly, forgetting to withdraw my hand from the restraining clasp with which he had enfolded it. "So you think that, too," I said slowly.

"Ah!" His eyes gleamed as they held mine. "I thought, somehow, you weren't quite so trustful of the Mark men as Lillian appears to be. What's the reason for your being a doubting Thomas?"

But I closed my lips firmly. I have seen Lillian at work many, many times and never have I known her to make a mistake in judging people correctly. Besides I had no knowledge of Lillian's real sentiments. I had no right to discuss her with this man, who had failed her so signally, even though I knew that his inquiry sprang only from the desire to aid her.

"Indeed, I had no intention of rebuking you, and I know Lillian would be grateful for your advice. It is only that a message relayed is never effectual. Why don't you come up to the apartment and tell these things to Lillian herself?"

"But don't forget."

To my astonishment he burst into a hearty laugh while the displeasure vanished from his face as if by magic, and his clasp upon my hand tightened. I made a decided effort to pull it away, but found it impossible, while Mr. Underwood's eyes laughed audaciously down at me.

"I need this hand for a minute or two," he said, "so you might as well be patient. But let me relieve your mind. I had no idea of intimating that you are only a mental mouser compared with Lillian. It was your own attitude toward her that I was illustrating. —So say you forgive me before I escort you upstairs, but also let me assure you that nothing would induce me to give any unsolicited advice to old Lil."

He paused with a reminiscent twinkle in his eyes and I guessed that he was remembering some of the spirited arguments that used to convulse the friends of the Underwoods in the old days. Both had flashing rapier-like powers of speech, and neither hesitated to designate a spade by its proper name.

"So that's that," he added abruptly, "but"—with a sudden plunge into the theatrical manner which he so much affects—"you haven't said you forgive me yet. Take your time, though. I'm going to hold your hand until you do, and I'll radio this old universe, I'm in no hurry."

"I forgive you," I said quickly, and made another attempt to draw my hand away. This time he made no effort to retain it, but the rueful look he gave me was so ludicrous that I could not repress a laugh. He shook his head reproachfully as he assisted me to alight from the car.

"You're the hardest-hearted little wretch in the world," he whispered, as he touched the bell of our apartment and waited for the opening click which would signal Lillian's response to his ring. "But don't forget that your old Uncle Dudley is right on the job whenever you need him, and for the love of Lulu, follow your hunch and keep a weather eye out on this fur mess! Goodnight, Lady Fair."

The Omaha Bee, Omaha, Neb. Gentlemen:—

The tendency, for some time, has been toward one paper for Real Estate advertising. About nine months ago we decided to advertise extensively in The Omaha Bee. We are very well satisfied to the results we have received through advertising in The Omaha Bee.

In the last two or three weeks we have noticed an increase of calls coming from The Bee. Our office is very optimistic and we believe that the prices are practically stabilized and there is plenty of business if you go out and get it, and the best way we know of is to get this advertising extensively in The Omaha Bee.
