Again the Coat to Match

By ELEANOR GUNN. The costume idea which dominates the fall style situation, and has for the past season, makes a special appeal when the tawny tones of tortoise shell are employed.

A model which emphasized this has a coat of warm brown fallie lined with crepe in a more golden tone, which is what is employed for the frock beneath—a frock plain enough for street wear with coat omitted, but it is so much smarter when in company with it.

Metal embroidery in dull gold and silver tones in some way suggests that lace be used to trim it. The model could be copied using heavy lace dyed a deep beige, for we are accustoming ourselves to the idea that lace is too important a trimming to be foregone even for street wear.

The thousands of black crepe satins yoked, or in some way trimmed with deeply tinted lace seen everywhere, are a living testimony of the rejuvenation of lace.

The straightline coats sans fur permits of the choice of either a silk scarf or a fur one. Animal scarfs are too flattering to be given up, and there are so many possibilities in blending the fur with the frock—foxes being obnoxious enough to be of any color, after they have passed through the mysterious rites peculiar to furriers.

One of these had a black ground and was flowered with large rose pink motifs predominating. The cape was knee length, pleated and apparently separate and tied loosely around the neck with fine black lace banding. Another showed white flowers on black, the cape being shorter. A similar model, also black and white, was noted at the Westchester Biltmore Beach club.

Steinway

Style M Grand Piano

Antique Mahogany Case

$1,425

This is the smallest of the five styles of Steinway Grand, but much larger than the "Baby" Grands of other makes. We call it "The Miniature," but its length is 5 feet, 7 inches, giving sufficient sound-board area, and string length for the best effects of the Grand Piano. Every extra inch of strings in a Grand multiplies the value of tone and volume so tremendously that buyers should be cautious of "Grands" that are Grands only in shape.

We cordially invite you to call at our salerooms and hear the incomparable STEINWAY tone.

Liberal allowance made for instruments of other makes in exchange. Convenient terms of payment arranged if desired.
