Your Problems

Martha Allen

Religious Difference.

My Dear Miss Allen: I am seeking your advice, but my trouble is not like most young girls. I am 17, considered fair looking and have a very pleasing personality. I have kept company with a young man of 21 for nearly a year and we plan to be married in a few years. His parents strongly object to his going with me on account of differences in religious views. I did not know whether I should give him up or not. He says he loves me too much for that and that it is none of their business. I certainly do love him and it would break my heart to give him up. But what am I to do? Please give me your frank advice. Thanking you very much and all my best wishes I am, just a CHINESE PUZZLE.

If you and the young man can agree, his parents should not interfere. Especially is this true since you are not rushing into matrimony, but are waiting several years to marry. Many people of different religious views have married and been very happy; it has caused disagreement and trouble in other cases. So after all it depends upon the individuals. If you are tolerant and considerate of each other, I think you could work out your problem. But, remember it is yours to work out and should not be settled by the young man's parents.

Dear Miss Allen: I am to be bridesmaid at a church wedding. Should I wear a large picture hat, or just a head band over my hair? ALICE.

It isn't a question for you to determine. The bride should tell her attendants whether she wishes them to wear hats or not. The bride may dictate the color scheme and even the materials of her attendants' gowns.

Mrs. Sadie McM.: I believe the best thing for you to do is to advertise in the want ad section, stating your qualifications and the kind of work you would like to do. I think you should be able to find employment, for refined, capable women are in demand in private homes. Your defective hearing should make no difference in a family where you would not have to take care of children.

Suzanne: Cans of frozen fruit make delicious salad or dessert courses for the summer weather. Buy cans of fruit salad if you prefer a variety of fruits, and without opening the can, freeze the contents. Pack in an ice cream freezer, or just in a pack of well salted ice. Before opening, dip can in hot water to loosen the fruit from the tin. Do not open in usual way, but cut the can off about a quarter of an inch down on the side.

Entertain for Mother. Mrs. Xenophon Smith will entertain at luncheon on Friday for her mother, Mrs. Seery, who is her guest from Topeka, Kan.

At Linoma Beach. Mrs. F. A. Nash gave a picnic for her nephews, John D., Edward and Billy Creighton today at Linoma Beach.

When East meets West, it remembers the coffee

VISITORS from the East and from abroad thrill to the scenic glories of the West, to be sure; they tell the folks back home of whole-hearted hospitality, naturally; and, invariably, they speak of that "wonderful western coffee!"

Yes, the West knows and loves its coffee. And, who can blame it? Just purchase the vacuum seal of a tin of Hills Bros. Red Can Coffee and let that aroma waft its way upward!

Better still, brew a cup and lift it to your lips! Surely, the gods were not more favored. That incomparable flavor is locked in vacuum, that it may come to you fresh whenever you break the seal—days, weeks, years later! Yes . . . it is wonderful coffee!

With all its high quality, Hills Bros. Coffee is not high-priced. It is economical to buy—and economical to use. Hills Bros., San Francisco.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Way Madge and Lillian Handled the Interruption.

Mindful of Lillian's admonition to act as a woman naturally would if suddenly awakened from sleep by so alarming a summons, I rose to a sitting posture as the knocking and the words "Open in the name of the Lord," came to my ears, and quivered out a tremulous: "Oh! What is it? Who's there?" "We're officers, lady," the raucous voice replied, "and we ain't goin' to hurt you, but—"

"Lillian! Lillian!" I interrupted in a pretended frantic appeal. "Wake up! There's a man out side who says he's an officer, and—"

"An officer?" Lillian's tone was truculent. "What's an officer doing at your door?"

"Look here," the voice said impatiently. "I'm not going to stand here all night. Open the door."

"Who are you?" Lillian demanded adding an aside to me: "Switch on the light, Madge and get into your negligee. Don't be frightened child."

good-sized mouse to hide in the room, the command appeared eminently judicious, but the men took it with the greatest seriousness circling the room and looking into the window recesses, even up the chimney, while the leader strode to the door of the bedroom, which Lillian had closed when she crept back to bed.

"Come along in here, boys," he commanded, but Lillian stepped between him and the others.

"Just a second," she said, raising her hand with authority. "We have no objection to your going into that room to satisfy yourself that there is no one there whom you wish. But there are young girls asleep in there, and I will not permit them to be frightened by all these men. Besides, you have shown no warrant, nothing save your badge, and I am not at all certain that I should not telephone to a friend of mine at headquarters." He interrupted her hastily.

"I'm not in the business of frightening young girls. But I've got to satisfy myself—stubbornly—that the man I want is not in there. Stay here, boys. One of you slip into the hall to see that nobody goes out of here. I'll search this room myself."

"How do we know you're an officer?" Lillian countered. "Have you any badge or credentials or warrant?" "I have everything," but the voice came back impatiently, "and if you don't stir your stumps I'm going break down this door."

"You won't need to do that." There was just the right amount of apologetic concern in Lillian's voice. "We're dressing as fast as we can. But please don't make so much noise. We have relatives asleep—young girls—whom we do not wish to awaken if we can help it."

"Search This Room, Boys!"

"We won't awake the babies," the man returned with a note of jocularly in his voice, "if they don't wake up themselves. But your two minutes are about up. Come, now open this door."

Both Lillian and I had been dressing frantically, and she gave me a reassuring nod. I walked to the door to open it, and as I did so I saw her take something hastily from beneath her pillow and thrust it into the bed of her gown. My spirits rose at her action, for I knew what the object was, the tiny but deadly silencer pistol which she always carried when she was working on some investigation.

A tall man with a powerful torso and fairly good looking, in a rough sort of way, pushed past me as I opened the door, and beckoned to two other men, who followed him into the room.

"Did a man run into your rooms just now—a young fellow?" the big man glared down at me as he asked the question, and I saw the eyes of his followers darting, rattle-like, about the room. I drew myself up indignantly.

"Indeed no!" I said, vehemently, while the remnants of my Puritan conscience were soothed by the remembrance that I spoke nothing but the truth. It was not my province, I reminded my conscience, to tell the man that Mollie Fawcett had been arrayed in masculine attire when she dashed into our room like a pursued animal only a few minutes before.

"Well, we'll soon find out!" His voice lost a little of its sternness, and I saw that Lillian's artistic stage management was impressing him.

"Search this room, boys."

The search begins.
