New Globes Glisten Along Gay Rialto, Heralding Another Season of Uncertainty

By PERCY HAMMOND.

YORK, Aug. 16 .- The an nual midsummer lacunae along Broadway is now at an end and myriads of ferocious and incandes cent bulbs are replacing the comfortable gloom that for nigh a month shrouded the desolate caverns of the 'Forties. The writing on the billboards reads doom to all who have been wooing the sylvan terrains and the bosky coverts, and there will be no release henceforward. The estimators of the mimes are in the same mental orientation as the Senegambian in jail who asked a newcomer how long he was in for. "Sixty days," responded the newcomer. "Dat's nothin'," said the other, "Ah'm here

New ventures are plotted by the producers, and the doxology of the press agent is heard in the land. The list of enterprises in contemplation for immediate serving is kilometers long already, and includes the Scandinavian, the Czech, the Neopolitan, the Teutonic, the Anglo-Saxon, and Abys sinian, the Muscovite, the Celtic, the Gallic and the Yiddish, as well as the merely local.

Already the temper of the new of ferings is changing. The hurly-burly is taking on weight, and the present preponderance of sprightly carousals is shadowed by sterner stuff. The comedies without music have begun to arrive and soon the bus boys will be staggering under ponderous reticules full of drama. The seer and yellow is presaged.

With the years the routine doesn't change, except to get a little slicker, and there are annually a few more theaters to be opened and shut. We whirl around like squirrels in a re-

Perhaps the industrialists of the drama are making up, in their present frenzy, for the slackness of July which, it was noted, did very bad business following a rather lethargic spring. As early as May there was wailing and gnashing of teeth, and the chirurgeons had hardly time to count out the flickering pulse of one expiring opus before they were called the bedside of another. There were demises on every street, and the cadavers were shoveled into their eternal homes with as little ceremony as during the great plague year.

The rigors were traced to many pect of flaming eyes and claws and other appurtenances of inimical and fabulous beasts of prey. Astute medicos pointed to the thin, miasmic wraith of the radio, which they aver lulled like mandragora the citizens in their domestic cubicles and surfeited them with the sickish plums of parsimonious entertainment.

Many men held that it was not the tropical ether that caused the inanition among the theaters, nor yet the flickering celluloids, nor the drone of

Instead of viewing these habits as typical of life in the Long Island comedy set, Mrs. Westcourt takes a firm stand. She esents her husband's sententious observation that 'the woman of forty is the high priestess of her sex,' and at forth briskly for Paris and a new life following the commandments of her heart. Her husband and her daughter are left to whatever consolations they can find. 'Dancing Mothers' has the merit of an exceptionally happy end

Westcourt's realization that they would fail again which caused her to lesert, with excellent courtesy and restrain, her hearthstone.

"'Dancing Mothers,' which is the work of Edgar Selwyn and Edmund Goulding, has a good cast. The palm goes to Mary Young, who presents a neat and charming portrayal of Mrs. Westcourt. Helen Hayes as "Kittens" carries a souse through two acts very creditably and makes as appealing as ne could her slightly ungrateful role. John Halliday and Henry Stephenson are excellent as lover and father, and Norman Mitchell and Elsie Lawson more than meet the exigencies of their parts.

"While there is a very smart and engrossing climax to the third act, it is my duty to report that the first two acts seemed Monday night a little slow, and the play on the whole, unlike the reducing girdle advertised in the program, didn't appear to be strong enough to really hold you in."
