Old Al' Edmondson Veteran Printer, Dies at Hospital

Aged "Typo" Came to Middle-West When Men of His Craft Also Trimmed Lamps.

Old Al is gone! This does not mean a great deal to the rushing, bustling public, but in circles where he was known the announcement that A. W. Edmondson, 73, has gone across the river will cause a pause.

"Old Al" was one of the old-school "typos." He had "printed" across the continent in the days when printers were "lamp-trimmers" as well as artisans. He worked in Louisville with Charley Church, and in Cincinnati with George Ahrensburg. He and Colonel McCullough of The Omaha Bee set type together on the Moberly Gazette the night the mill pond froze over, which was longer than 45 years ago.

Al Edmondson had been on the pension list of the I. T. U. for many years, and twice had been a resident at Union Printers' home, Colorado Springs, where he made himself well known as a volunteer guide. His knowledge of the home and its history, and his genial, courtly manners, made him a favorite with visitors. He returned from there to Omaha several months ago.

"Old Al" was something more than a printer. He was probably the most enthusiastic baseball fan Omaha ever produced, an ardent fisherman, and a walking chronicle of the past. Several winters spent in Cuba gave him a deep understanding of horse racing, too.
