Mrs. Meredith Nicholson at Kountze Home

Mrs. Meredith Nicholson, wife of the novelist, and frequently a visitor here, is spending a few days at the C. T. Kountze home. Her son, Charles, accompanies her.

Mr. Nicholson is remaining in Indianapolis, where he is working on a serial which is to run in Cosmopolitan this winter.

The story is to be of the middle west, Mrs. Nicholson stated this morning, which may lead Omaha friends of the Nicholsons to hope they may find themselves characterized, flatteringly of course, in the magazine pages, as once some of our townsmen were in a Nicholson book.

But "middle west" is a term depending on one's point of view. With the Nicholsons it means Indiana, so Omahans may here and now abandon hope of self-recognition in the forthcoming story.

Mr. Nicholson is the author of a political article which will appear in the next issue of the Yale Review.

Affairs for the Guest of Mrs. Robert Loomis.

Mrs. Robert Loomis gave a picnic on Monday evening for her guest, Mrs. Bruce Baker, of Chicago, who will be remembered as Miss Pauline Westfall, a visitor here during Mrs. Loomis' school days.

Tuesday Mrs. Ralph Coad gave a bridge for the guest and Wednesday Mrs. Milton Peterson gave a luncheon-bridge for eight guests in her honor. Thursday Mrs. William Jackson, who was also a student with Mrs. Loomis, and Mrs. Baker at Monticello seminary, will give a bridge.

Miss Dorey to Be Miss Lineburg's Bridesmaid.

Miss Georgianna Dorey has been chosen by Miss Katherine Lineburg to serve as bridesmaid at the Meyer-Lineburg nuptials, September 18.

Added to the affairs for Miss Lineburg is a bridge-luncheon to be given September 13 by Mrs. Charles McMartin and daughter, Mrs. E. F. Schaefer. A bridge-luncheon September 12, when Mrs. H. H. Asken will be hostess, and a trousseau tea Mrs. Ben Baker will give September 10. Lieutenant Myer and his bride will be stationed at Fort Omaha temporarily.

At Summer Home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Whitehouse entertained at a weekend party at their summer home, "Jennie Wren," at Magnolia, Ia. Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hoag, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Powers and son, Donald; Mr. and Mrs. Ed Chapman, all of Omaha.

The husbands of the Al Lon Gam Kensington club of Magnolia, entertained their wives at a fish fry at "Jennie Wren," Sunday, August 17. Forty members were present.

For Miss Cotton.

Mrs. Edgar Allen will entertain at luncheon Thursday for Miss Willa Dawson Cotton of Marietta, O., a prominent member of the D. A. R., who is here as the guest of Mrs. Robert Shields. She arrived Tuesday.

Sigma Chi Omicron.

Sigma Chi Omicron society of the University of Omaha will entertain the rushers at a twilight tea on Thursday at the home of Miss Madge Koesler.

Chizum-Workman.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Workman announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Florence Workman, to Garrison C. Chizum, which took place at the Broadway Methodist church parsonage in Council Bluffs Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock. Rev. Burton Sheppard performed the ceremony which was followed by a wedding dinner at the home of the bride's parents. The couple will live at 2027 Marcy street.

Affairs for Mrs. Whitehead.

Mrs. John C. Clarke will give a bridge-luncheon Wednesday at home for Mrs. Lewis Whitehead of Chicago, who is visiting her sister, Mrs. Roger Holman. Mrs. Frank Tinney of Council Bluffs will entertain at a bridge luncheon Thursday at her home.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

A Selfish Love.

Dear Miss Allen: I am 20 and in love with a boy of 18, who loves me dearly. He is helping to support his mother. His father died with tuberculosis several years ago, and he has a sister who has it now. Do you think he could take care of me if we married?

LOUISE.

Your question does sound selfish to me. If you loved this boy in the right way, I wonder you would not be more concerned about his health than about marrying him and being "supported" by him. "In sickness and in health" the marriage lines read.

You are both too young to marry, and especially under the circumstances.

I do not have the fear of tuberculosis that many people possess. I think most of us are exposed to it at one time or another. If we keep our bodies strong, conserve our health, get plenty of food, fresh air and exercise, we are not liable to contract the disease. And, even if we do, I believe a systematic effort in the right climate will effect a cure. But, as in other things, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. If you love this boy do not marry him now and add to his burdens. Help him to secure vigorous health, cherish your love and marry him a few years hence.

Defeating Conventions.

Dear Miss Allen: I met a young lady without an introduction. She hurt her ankle and I took her home in my car. I liked her and want to see her again. How can I do it without making her think I am taking advantage of having done her a kindness?

GEORGE.

You could with all propriety, telephone the girl's mother and ask how she is making her think I am taking advantage of having done her a kindness?

See Napier's Window Exhibition of Autumn Shoes and Hosiery.

Dear Martha Allen: What is the age of boys and girls of Nebraska? Hoping to see answer in paper soon.

PEGGY AND BOBBY.

Do you mean when are boys and girls of age in the state? If so, the answer is 21.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Parting Question of Caution Lillian Asked Madge.

I was fatigued enough in mind and body to be exceedingly grateful for Lillian's prescription to "get into bed and sleep until daylight," but, with experience of her little ways I looked steadily at her.

"If you'll follow your own prescription," I answered.

She threw up her head impatiently. "Don't be an anointed idiot, just because you know how," she quoted from my mother-in-law, then laid down the law with decision. "I have all day to sleep. The minute I have seen the last of you and your charges I shall tumble into bed and sleep all day probably."

"Yes, I know your 'probably,'" I gibed. "You already have an appointment with Mrs. Marks."

"For the first time her husband gets out of the house, which will be nearly noon," she interrupted. "Seriously, Madge, please don't upset the apple cart. You'll need all the sleep you can get for that drive down the island, and that's the important thing just now."

I protested no more, for there was a finality in Lillian's tone which I knew of old. It makes absolutely useless any attempt to turn her from a line of action she has marked out for herself. Secretly I was glad that my conscience and my wishes were at peace, and I crawled thankfully into bed and screened my face from the light and immediately fell into a sleep so profound that the next thing I knew was Lillian shaking me.

"You must have needed sleep," she said pityingly. "I am so sorry to waken you, it's getting light."

"You Look Wide Awake."

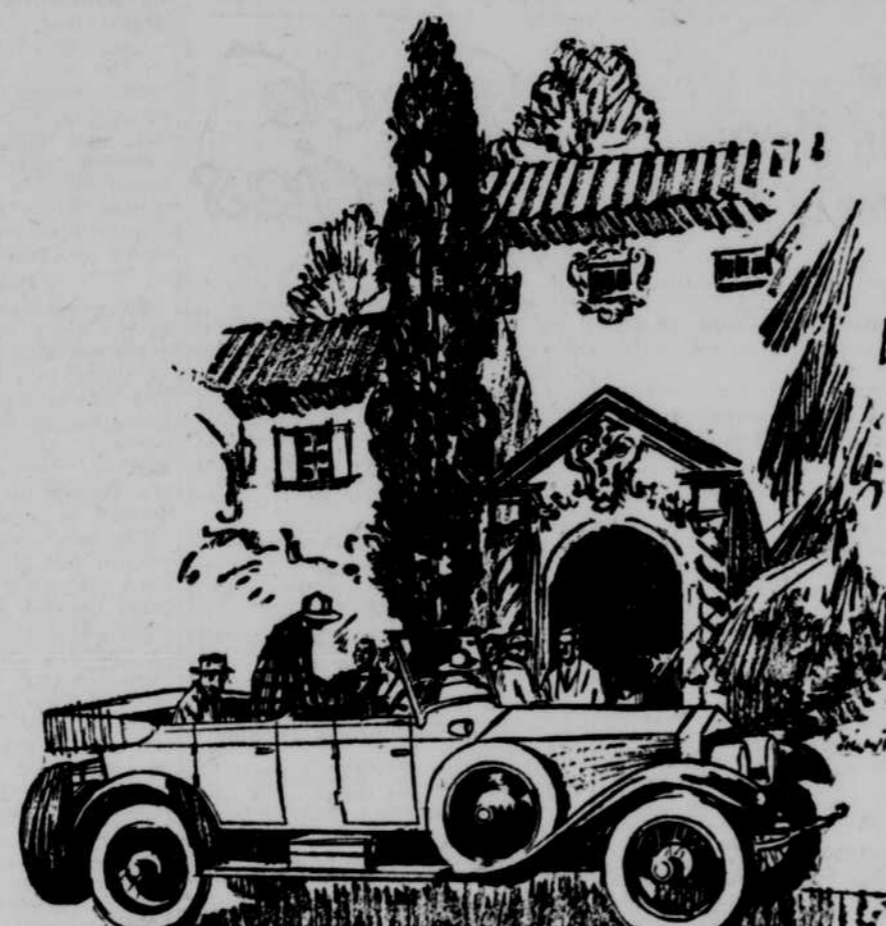

Through the window I saw the melting of the darkness into the grey of the dawn, and sprang from the bed, looking intently at her.

"How do you manage it?" I asked. "You look positively fresh and wide awake, and yet I'll wager you haven't had a wink of sleep."

"I won't take your wager," she replied. "But I've had what's better a hot plunge and an ice-cold needle shower. Hurry with your dressing, lady. Your breakfast is almost ready. I'll get the girls up as soon as you've finished dressing and give them their breakfast while you're gone to present the signet ring of the Earl of Essex."

The merry, quizzical glance which accompanied her words brought a quick flush to my cheek, and then anger at my own embarrassment made my face fairly burn. I knew that Lillian was getting a bit of quiet amusement out of the contretemps which compelled me, because of a forgotten garage check, to summon Harry Underwood from his unknown lodgings with the scarab which he melodramatically had given me for some terrible emergency, and while I myself had laughed with her at the absurdity of the thing, I could not help a feeling of resentment against Harry Underwood for thus making me ridiculous.

I was determined, however, that my voice and manner should belie my flushed face, and I managed a light laugh as I started for the needle-shower which Lillian had recommended as a sure cure for sleeplessness.

"I trust you don't predict the earl's fate for me," I said.

Madge's Strange Errand.

Her face shadowed quickly, and all at once I remembered the touch of superstition, heritage of some far-off Hibernian ancestor, which sometimes surprisingly manifests itself in her. "Don't talk nonsense," she said crossly, and then she laughed at her own folly.

But when I had finished my shower and had hurried through my dressing and my breakfast, the shadow of worry was still in her eyes as she went to the door with me.

"You're sure this is safe—this place to which you're going?" she began, and then amended her speech quickly: "But of course, Harry wouldn't send you into danger of any kind! However, be careful, won't you?"

"Of course, you ridiculous child!" I answered, stooping and kissing her, but she detained me, her hand upon my arm, her eyes looking into mine. "Did Harry say positively that you had a man reckoning up Grace Draper?" she asked anxiously.

"Positively—also absolutely," I answered, but the laugh which I sent back over my shoulder to her as I walked away from the door was decidedly a forced one.

I did not fear Grace Draper in the face of Mr. Underwood's assurance that he would have her watched, but I did not care to hear her name.

Mrs. Milton Shaw Kimball of Portland, Me., who is the guest of her father, G. W. Ingwerson at Hotel Fontenelle, will remain for two weeks.
