Omaha Girls Leave to Do "Big-Time" Orpheum

Two more Omaha girls have joined the rank of professional dancers, Misses Katherine Benson and Catherine Gallagher, who left Wednesday night for New York to join the Gilt company. Both have been pupils of Miss Mary Cooper.

"The Gilt company are lovely people," said Miss Cooper. "They were in Omaha last year at the Orpheum, and it was at that time the girls made successful tryout. Miss Betty Phipps appeared with them and was asked to join the company, but was persuaded by her parents to remain at home.

Miss Benson and Gallagher will do "big-time" Orpheum in the east. They will be in New York 14 weeks before starting out on the road.

Miss Benson is the daughter of the W. B. Bensons and Miss Gallagher of the A. M. Gallaghers.

Miss Virginia Upham, Miss Frances Ellick (now married), Miss Frances Earenficht and Miss Helen Kroner are other local girls who are successes as professional dancers.

Former Friend at Exeter Visits John Robertson.

Phillip Hopkins of Worcester, Mass., and Wendell Toddard of Boston, Yale students, are the guests of John Robertson.

Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Robertson were former classmates at Exeter prep school in New Hampshire, and both were on the swimming team there. Mr. Hopkins won his year on the Yale swimming team this year.

Wednesday Mr. Robertson and his guests swam at the Athletic club and Thursday afternoon they picnicked and swam at Valley with Misses Natalie Hastings, Gretchen Dishong and Nancy Finson.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Way Madge Sent Her Summons to Harry Underwood.

The street into which I stepped from the apartment door appeared indescribably trow to me in the unpromising light of the gray dawn.

Out in the country I knew one could see the flush of the coming sunrise in the sky, but here horizon and sun gleams were alike shut from one's eyes by the towering buildings that imprison the city dwellers.

The neighborhood still lay wrapped in slumber. A belated nighthawk taxi or two, a couple of early milk wagons, a solitary pedestrian zig-zagging his vinous way homeward—these were the only signs of life on the streets. Even the proprietor of the corner fruit stand who slept in the cubbyhole behind his display was not yet in evidence, and the only cheery spot in the whole neighborhood was the all-night bakery on the corner, brilliant with light, bustling with activity.

I crossed the street to avoid the intoxicated man who, however, was paying no attention to anything but the necessity of planting his feet upon the sidewalk instead of elevating them into the air, crossed it again lower down, and finally, with bounding pulses and flushed face—for my errand made me indolently self-conscious—arrived at the door of the pawnshop Harry Underwood had pointed out to me.

It was too early, of course, for anyone to be stirring inside, but I knew from Mr. Underwood that the ringing of a bell at the side of the door would summon one of the proprietors from their living quarters above the shop. It was several seconds, however, before I could summon courage enough to push the bell. To my inflamed imagination it seemed that every window on the street held curious eyes watching me.

The answer to my ring came with surprising promptitude, considering the unseasonable hour. It was little more than a minute before I saw coming from the rear of the shop the grotesque figure of the stouter of the two proprietors, his shuffling feet covered with large felt slippers, his pudgy figure attired in a brilliantly-colored bathrobe which he held together with a firm grip.

He advanced to the glass front of the door, looked at me as if he never had seen me, and called non-committally:

"What do you want?"

For answer I put my hand against the glass holding the scarab Mr. Underwood had given me, so that he could not help but see it. He bent and scrutinized it closely—patiently he was taking no chances—and then without a word reached out his disengaged hand, unlocked and opened the door, and beckoned me inside.

I advanced only a step, however, just enough to hold out the scarab to him, and say breathlessly:

"Please give this to Mr. Underwood, and ask him to come over as soon as possible." Then I turned and fairly bolted out of the door.

I knew that it was a perfectly unreasoning terror which was mine, but I felt that I should have screamed diely opened the door for him. "What has happened?" he demanded huskily, as he strode through the door. I came just as quickly as I could.

He evidently was thoroughly imbued with the idea that I would use the scarab for nothing save the most desperate emergency, and it was with a choking desire to laugh that I said demurely:

"Nothing has happened save that Lillian wishes me to leave the city at once, and you are the only one who knows where my car is. I think you have the garage receipt in your pocket."

Your Problems

Mother Remembers.

Dear Martha Allen: As others have come to you for advice, I will do so too. I am 27 and have been going with a boy of 19 for two months. He is a nice boy and I have known him for over eight years. We went together about a year ago, and then I moved from his town and just started going with him recently. The trouble now is: My mother don't want me to go with him. She says he isn't a good kid. Before I moved he used to run around quite a bit with a tough crowd and drink, but Miss Allen, he has changed so much in the last year. You wouldn't think he is the same boy. He has given up all his bad habits and really behaves now; but my mother still thinks he is the same boy he was a year ago. I have tried to tell her he is different, but she won't listen. I think a lot of him and he does of me, and I don't want to quit going with him. Should mother still hold this against him?

TROUBLED.

Mother know how serious it is for a girl to marry a man of bad habits, so, naturally, they are a bit over-cautious, as your mother is. Better be a bit cautious yourself.

Fieldie Man.

Dear Miss Allen: I have often read your letters to other girls and I wonder if you can help me. I am a young girl of 15. Now, I have been going with a young man for some months. He has kissed me many times. Now I have just found out he kissed other girls as well. I really care for him and wish he would stop kissing other girls. Now he seems to like me for he hasn't gone with another girl since I have known him. Now, what way would you suggest to make him care for me? Hoping to see this letter in print, I am,

SWEET SIXTEEN.

He does seem to care for you, since he is confiding his kissing to you for the present. But a man who gives his kisses so lightly transfers affection quickly, too, so you probably will not be troubled for long.

HEALTHY WOMEN, HAPPY HOMES

Good dispositions succumb. Irritability and snappy retort take the place of happiness and amiability. Sunshine is driven out of homes; in fact, they are often wrecked, and friends are estranged when women suffer from ailments peculiar to their sex. The use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will overcome such ailments and restore health and happiness. Do not resort to strong stimulants or narcotics when this great strengthening, healing remedy made from roots and herbs is always within reach.
