Caverly to Receive Case of Leopold and Loeb Tonight Crowe to Complete Argument Today.

(Continued from Page One.) your honor, to let my clients live, to spare their families the pain and disgrace that otherwise they must suf-

That was all. The defense had closed. It was Crowe's turn; his time to argue that the youths pay for their crime with their lives. How it differed from the argumen of Darrow! How the cry for blood struck the fiber of the heart after Dayrow's patient, eloquent pleading for hope, for charity, for mercy, for life itself.

"Disgrace to Families." "They come here begging for mercy," exclaimed Crowe in thundering voice. "They are about as much entitled to mercy as a couple of rattlesnakes, filled with poison, coiled and ready to strike. They are as much entitled to mercy from your honor as two mad dogs. They are a disgrace to their honored families, and the only good purpose they can serve now in life is to go out of it, and as quickly as possible." And the state's attorney slashes to destroy the picture of the youth as painted by the defense:

"When I came into this case and learned of its horrible details, I thought the playthings of these youths were chisels, guns and bottles of acid. But now we are told that their playthings are teddy bears, cowboy suits and kiddle kars.

'We have been in the kindergartens, we have been in the nurseries and we have been in psychopathic laboratories. I think it is now time to come back to the criminal code, in the criminal court."

Super-men? No, thunders the state's attorney: "They are not super-men. They're a couple of egotistical smart alecks. spoiled and pampered by their folks. They repeat, parrot-like, their knowledge. One minute one of these wise men from the east is coming here to tell us they still believe in Santa Clause, the next minute Darrow is telling us they don't believe in God." Crowe Not Like Darrow. The courtroom was crowded as Vrowe argued. The day was warna

Among the spectators were a score of theatrical folks-theatrical managers their wives and actors and actresses But somehow the demand for death that came from the state's attorney' lips did not grip the heart as did the appeal for mercy that Clarence Dar

Darrow, immaculate English, words that fit exactly in the place they be-long-Crowe, violent, not much attention to English, frequent use of slang. Darrow told Judge Caverly the death penalty never reduced crime Crowe comes before him with figures to prove to the contrary. He tells the court the law says that in exalty. He tells the court that a judge has no right to set aside the law that the people have made through their legislatures.

Then he gives his statistics to prove that hanging does reduce crime. Darrow says hanging does not stop murder," Crowe told the court. "I will direct your attention to the year of 1920. In a period of less than 60 days 15 men were sentenced to death in the criminal courts of Cook county. The records of the police department and the records of the crime commission show that as a result of those sentences murder fell 51 per cent in Cook county during the year. Uurges Penalty.

Enforcement of the criminal laws, stiff sentences, reduces all crime, Crowe argued.

We had a reign of terror inaugurated here for years by criminals who dominated labor unions," he said. 'They were above and beyond the law. They laughted at it and slopped its face, just the same as these two poor young sons of millionaires. Forty-one of them were convicted in the courts of Cook county. The building industry, that had been strangled for years, began to revive and take on life and we have heard no more of these criminal leaders."

There is nothing personal in his prosecution of the defendants, Crowe explained. He said:

"If I were not a state's attorney, I would have absolutely no feeling in by heart against these two as individuals. When they were in my custody, where it was a matter of man to man, I treated them with kindness and consideration. But when I had fastened the crime upon these defendants, then I had a duty to perforb, a sworn duty to perform, the same as your honor has. "No Right to Forgive."

Your honor has no right to forbut, sitting there as the chief justice of this great court, you have no right to forgive anybody who violates the law. And you have got to deal with him as the law prescribes.

"And I want to say to you, your honor, in this case, with the mass of evidence presented by the state, if a jury were sitting in that box and they returned a verdict and did not fix the punishment at death, every person in this community, including your honor and myself, would feel that that verdict was founded on corrup-

Crowe attacked the philosophy of Clarence Darrow that would spare the life of a murderer. He described it as an "anarchistic philosophy, almost as dangerous as the crime it-
