Politician Endowed With Six Millions Known Here

Classmate of Malcolm Baldrige at Yale Featured in Magazine Story—Was in Omaha Last Spring.

A classmate, fraternity brother, and very close friend of Malcolm Baldrige at Yale, is the interviewed hero of an article in the August 23 edition of "Liberty" magazine, F. Trubee Davison, son of the late Henry P. Davison, one time head of the American Red Cross. The young man had visited in Omaha with Mr. Baldrige on several occasions. He was here last spring for a short stay and in June the two young men were together for 10 days at a stag house party and reunion at New Haven.

"An Endowed Politician," is the title of the story about F. Trubee Davison. The sub-title explains that it is "an amazing story of how the late Henry P. Davison, a partner in the house of Morgan, created a trust fund of $6,500,000 in his will so that his eldest son could be a politician, free of all motives for private gain."

It is interesting to note that Malcolm Baldrige, as well as his "Skull and Bones" brother, is interested in politics. Mr. Baldrige has served in the legislature of this state and Mr. Davison in the assembly in New York. Both are athletic. According to the magazine story, Mr. Davison is 28 years old.

In April, 1918, Mr. Davison married Miss Dorothy Peabody, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mr. Peabody being head master of Groton school where Mr. Davison prepared for college. Mr. Baldrige was an usher at the wedding.

When Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Baldrige were on their wedding trip east, they attended the wedding of Miss Alice Davison, sister of Trubee, to Artemus Gates.

THE HOUSEWIFE.

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

How Maded Drew Mollie Fawcett Out.

I learned one thing about Mollie Fawcett during the drive down the island to the farmhouse.

The girl possessed a very distinct dignity of her own, and surmounted herself with it when she thought it necessary, as she might expect a rampart.

There was no hint of sulks in her attitude after my curt answer to her question concerning Harry Underwood's name, but I was given to understand, without her having spoken a word in her own defense, that she knew she had transgressed against some code of mine, and that she would not offend again.

She was too ingenious, I really saw, to foresee that I would begin to feel myself in the wrong after her proud hurt silence, save for perfunctory answers to my comments, had continued for miles. But I did begin to feel remorseful, not for omitting an explanation of Lillian's relation to Harry—that, I still felt was no one's affair but their own—but for the brusqueness with which I had rebuffed what was after all a most innocuous and natural query.

Any feeling of remorse to me is like a goad pricking me until I have atoned. Therefore, after the driver Lillian had assigned me, had driven us across Queensboro bridge, and there been dismissed by me, and when I had left the heaviest traffic behind at Jamaica, I set myself to win back the girl's friendliness.

It was a harder task than I had fancied. Patently, she was determined not to expose herself to a second rebuff, and while she was exquisitely polite, it was not until I inadvertently spoke of the beauty of the morning sky—we had started so early that we were enabled to witness the full glory of the sunrise—and what its appeal would be to an artist, that she let down the barrier she had erected.

"Oh, do you draw, Mrs. Graham?" she asked, her face suddenly so illumined, her voice so lilting that I knew I had struck the keynote to some melody of her soul.

"Unfortunately, no," I smiled back at her. "But my husband is an artist, and I share—"

"Yes, I knew," she said breathlessly, evidently hearing only the word artist, and not noticing that she had interrupted my further speech. Then at her own inadvertent admission, she stopped suddenly and I heard her catch her breath as a frightened child might have done.

After all, that was all she was I told myself, with a sudden softening of my heart towards her, and I purposely made my voice casual but cordial as I went on exactly as if she had not spoken—

"His love for beauty. Indeed he has taught me to see beauty in many things where I never would have looked for it myself. If you are interested in the things artists like, Miss Fawcett, I am sure you will enjoy looking at the many drawings my husband has at the farmhouse. He has an outdoor studio—transformed from an old corn crib—which is simply crammed with sketches."

"Oh! I'd love it!" she said, and I broke my rule of keeping my eyes fixed on the road ahead for the instant occupied by a swift furtive glance at her shining eyes and rapt face.

I had been conscious of no motive beyond an attempted kindness in my chatter of Dicky's drawings, yet I realized now that something morbid in my subconsciousness had found voice and elicited this enthusiasm for my husband's work from this girl, whose attraction for Dicky had so tormented me.

The Journey's End.

I resolved that I would speak no more of either Dicky or his work, but I found that the topic was like the center of a whirlpool. Try as I might to row my conversational boat away from it, I made no headway, and always found myself circling the danger point again.

And Mollie Fawcett's tongue, loosened at last, asked innumerable questions concerning the life of an artist, queer questions, of the price paid a beginner, of the chances to dispose of drawings, of the training and experience necessary, of the risks run by one forsaking a stable if prosaic calling for the slender chances of succeeding where so many had failed.

I tried to answer the questions honestly, and to the best of my ability, while all the time my brain was keeping up a separate train of inquiry, trying to fathom the reason for the girl's intense interest in the subject. Had she ambitions of her own along this line—

With a little shiver I remembered another girl whose ambitions to be an artist, and Dicky's furtherance of it had so nearly resulted in tragedy, and earned for me a lasting and dangerous enemy.

It was just enough to realize, however, that Mollie Fawcett was a very different being from Grace Draper, as fine of character as the other was evil. But I was glad indeed when our drive was ended, and the turn into the farmhouse yard put an end to our talk of art and artists.

Your Problems

Do We Love But Once?

Dear Martha Allen: Do you think there is only one woman in the world for every man? I certainly do not. I was just reading the letter from "Shipwrecked" and I got the impression that he evidently did. I think that there are certain types of women that can get along with certain types of men. In other words, you have to have the right qualities.

I also do not believe that love comes but once, but I think probably that the first love is the sweetest. Yours, without a doubt, ADA.

I do not believe that there is just one woman predestined for each man, and that if these two don't meet and mate, life becomes a tragedy. But I do think we can become so attached to one person that no one else satisfies. We can come to perfect understanding with such few people, men or women, that the few we find are test become very dear to us. And after living with one such, the bond becomes so close that probably no one could ever quite fill the same place.

Whether or not love comes but once is a matter of individuality. No doubt there are many people who have loved utterly and devotedly with an affection which, once given, is never passed on to another. There are other people, more dispassionate in disposition, who might love very sweetly and sincerely any person who returned the feeling and who happened to be congenial and loyal and considerate.

Fitting Reply.

Dear Martha Allen: Is it improper to say "thank you" when being congratulated on your betrothal? If so, what should one say? A READER.

A polite "thank you" is quite in place as a reply to any congratulations.

To Whiten Skin with Lemon

The only harmless way to bleach the skin white is to mix the juice of two lemons with three ounces of Orchard White, which any druggist will supply for a few cents. Shake well in a bottle, and you have a whole quarter-pint of the most wonderful skin whiter, softener and beautifier.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon bleach into the face, neck, arms and hands. It can not irritate. Famous stage beauties use it to bring that clear, youthful skin and rosy-white complexion; also as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. You must mix this remarkable lotion yourself. It can not be bought ready to use because it acts best immediately after it is prepared.
