Only Five Lines.
No Missing Link.
Don't Sell Short.
Making Bad Medicine.
By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Just five lines, filling a little hole in a page crowded with advertising tells the story. Andreas Friedrick, 68 years old, hard, honest worker for 60 years, killed himself because he was worn out and could find no employment.

If an old horse had jumped over the cliff in despair or walked in front of a locomotive that would have appeared on the front page; the cruelty to animals society and the "Bide-A-Wee" home for discouraged animals would have been excited.

Men that write the history of our "civilization" 10,000 years from now will find all they care to know about it in those five lines.

The Hague reports a tribe of "missing links" inhabiting some of the small islands near Sumatra.

These "mysterious" creatures, half man and half ape, are called by the more highly developed natives "orang padeks." Scientists will find such creatures described in Marco Polo's travels. That ancient Ventian was a close observer.

There are no "missing links," therefore none will be discovered. Various animals, of the gorilla, orang, catarrh and chimpanzee type, developed slowly through a million of years into the leading types of human beings, African, Mongolian and white. To find the connecting links between the chimpanzee and Daniel Webster would be as difficult as to put your finger on the connecting link between a baby one hour old and a man of 70.

To judge a chain, examine its weakest link. To judge the human race, study savages.

The Canadian mounted police have brought down from cold North British Columbia an aged Indian squaw and four others.

This is what they had done: Game was scarce. Many died of hunger. Some "maker of bad medicine" must by "sorcery" have aroused the evil spirits.

A young Indian named Ttol of Moosin was found, at night, mumbling strange words over the fire in his shack. He, of course, was the maker of the bad medicine.

The old squaw betrayed him, young men tied him to a small tree and left him hanging head downward for several days, dying slowly. Then, growing impatient, the old squaw cut his throat.

She and the others probably will be hanged. How far from civilization is a planet with hundreds of millions of such savages? And for one superstition in the Indian, you will find 10 in the various white races. You can't have civilization until you have civilized people.

A recent marriage, attracting Europe's attention, reminds you of the constant mixing process that goes on among different tribes of human beings.

Sir Basil Zaharoff, 74 years old, one of the world's richest men, has piled up gigantic fortunes in many countries. The biggest owner of steel works in England, he owns more than half the Monte Carlo gambling house, great banks in Paris and elsewhere.

This most mysterious person is half Greek, half Russian, born in Constantinople, naturalized British. There are at least 50 races mixed in his blood.

He marries a Spanish lady whose full name is Maria Del Pilar Antonia Angela Patrocinio Simoni de Mugurio Y Beruete, duchess of Marquena and Villa-Franca de Las Caballeros. There are many kinds of racial possibilities in that name, Moorish, Carthaginian, Basque.

A new comet is discovered, "blazing across the sky two hours behind the sun." It's a big one, not quite strong enough yet to be seen without a telescope.

Once such a visitor would have filled millions with fear. Special prayers would have been offered, nations and individuals would have searched their souls and reuked themselves. Now we say: "Another comet; is that so?" And go about our business.

Betting on Coolidge is 3 to 1. Announcement that Al Smith will run again for governor did not change the odds.

Wall street's election gamblers believe that Smith's nomination won't increase Davis' strength, or they believe that many voting for Smith will vote for La Follette against Davis. There is sound judgment in the latter belief.

$176,000 ASKED FOR MAN'S DEATH

Special Dispatch to The Omaha Bee. Atlantic, Ia., Sept. 24.—The Rock Island railroad is defendant in a damage suit filed here by heirs of the late Walter Morgan, who ask $176,000 for the death of Morgan, who was killed at a road crossing near Atlantic, July 17. Kelso Morgan, Omaha attorney, and brother of the deceased, has filed the suit in behalf of the heirs.

The amount asked is the largest ever contained in a petition filed in the district court here. Morgan was a farmer and was killed when a southbound passenger train on the Griswold branch struck his truck at a grade crossing.

COREY TO TALK ON AK-SAR-BEN

C. E. Corey, head of the Corey & McKenzie Printing company, and past president of the Concord club, will give a "Forecast of Future Business of the Domain of Quivera," at the Concord club luncheon at Hotel Fontenelle Thursday. Clair E. Goddard, manager of the Carman Distributing company, will be chairman of the meeting.
