Your Problems

Martha Allen

Not Popular at Home.

Dear Martha Allen: I am coming to you with my troubles. I am 17, am considered good looking and have a good reputation. Now my trouble is this: Martha Allen, how can I be so popular among my boy and girl friends? I have tried, but in vain. When I go to parties or dances I am a wall flower and not even noticed there. I can go anywhere out of town and have a wonderful time. I cause very few know me. Why is it that I cannot make friends? Hoping to see my letter in print in The Omaha Bee soon, I am DISCOURAGED.

I can't think the people in your town are really different from people elsewhere. The difference is doubtless within yourself. Aren't you more friendly, more receptive to attention, more sure of other's kindness, when you are away? Too often we are at our best with strangers, but inclined to take our best friends for granted. We are exacting of them and resentful if they disappoint us. Forget about how other people act toward you in your own town, and make up your mind that you will be thoughtful toward them and interested in what they say. I'm sure that will help.

Slowly But Surely Jilted.

Dear Miss Allen: We are two girls of 20 and have been going about with a couple of boys of 21. We are deep in love with them. We have read your advice in the paper whenever we have the time, and at last have come to you ourselves for some of your advice.

At first the boys wanted us to marry them and they treated us with all kinds of respect. Then they commenced to jilt us. (Slowly but surely.) It is breaking our hearts and we would like to know what we could do to win them back.

Please answer in The Omaha Morning Bee some day this week. Yours respectfully, D. AND D. Think less about these boys and more about your self-respect. If these boys are "jilting" you, let them go. And even if you were trying to hold them, that would be the best course for you to pursue. People don't place a high value on what comes cheaply.

Flapper: The girl who refuses her kisses may, perhaps, lose a certain popularity, no matter how friendly and far from prudish her manner of refusing.

But, on the other hand, there's an old saying—and they generally are true—that what is hardest to attain is most desired, most precious. Make your kisses precious and greatly to be desired.

The flower that has been passed about from hand to hand loses a little of its bloom. The peach is not so tempting when its down is rubbed away.

It may be hard to refuse kisses to Tom, Dick and Harry. But you'll be safe in listening to that still, small, questioning inner voice which asks whether it would not be better to refuse.

When John proves his love for you by asking you to be his wife, maker of his home and mother of his children, you will know that it was worth your while to have kept your kisses very precious, very desirable. Then you'll have no regrets, for you can give your lips unasked—all your kisses—to the one man in all this happy world.

The Astounding Letter Hugh Grantland Wrote Midge.

I never have experienced an earthquake, but I think I had all the sensations described by those who have gone through one as the extravagant handwriting struck my eyes. My world indeed was shaking, for until the receipt of the letter which I held in my hand, unwilling to read further than the wild terms of endearment with which it began, I had leaned upon the knowledge of Hugh Grantland's friendship as one might rest against the shelter of a great rock.

I had known, of course, that Major Grantland cared for me with a feeling far stronger than friendship—it is a rare woman, found mostly in fiction, I suspect, who remains unconscious of a great love offered at her shrine, even though the man who offers it conceals his feeling heretically. But I also had known for Hugh Grantland had made it plain to me, that never by word, glance, or speech, would he trouble me with the betrayal of an emotion which any woman might be proud to have aroused, and for which I knew many women would have bartered much.

It was this knowledge, coupled with the remembrance of the service he had rendered us in restoring Junior to our arms that had made me feel guiltless of any disloyalty to Dicky in keeping up the friendship, which always had seemed such a refuge to me.

"A parafit gentil knight." The old quotation always has seemed to me to fit Hugh Grantland as if it had been written for him. Brave almost to foolhardiness, yet wise in strategy, stern in the pursuit of his duty, yet tender as a gentle woman to any helpless creature, generous, chivalrous, honorable, brilliant, these qualities of mind and soul housed in a magnificent body—I did not wonder that men admired him and women were willing to give him something more than admiration.

Dicky is my own man—never have my pulses throbbled for any other—and I know that the end of my life will still find me "cleaving only to him" but—

I cannot help thrilling at the thought that Hugh Grantland's heart has been in my keeping ever since we were thrown together in war work.

What Has Happened?

The letter in my hand, however, it is bore out the wisdom of its beginning, would spoil everything, cheapen the beautiful friendship which had been so dear to me, and make it necessary for me to shut Hugh Grantland out of my life.

What could have happened to make so sane a man break out in such rhodomontade as that which was starting up at me from the paper I held in my hand? With a squaring of my shoulders, and a realization that whatever the letter contained, I must read it, I lifted the single sheet and again read the salutation:

"My own love forever lost to me." I shivered a bit at the crudity of it, and hurried on feverishly. "Do not be angry at this letter. Beloved, nor call it impertinence—the words leaped out at me like living things. A man leaving the world, who never expects to taste life again, but who instead sees death facing him, may be pardoned for taking a final leave of the one dearest to him on earth. Your woman's intuition must have known you afe that to me and have been ever since I first looked into your wonderful eyes and saw revealed there your still more wonderful soul.

"I would go to my death with these words unwritten, were it not for two things. One is my reluctance to have you think that I had fallen for you when the postcards no longer reach you. It is the bitterest thought I have—that I can no longer stand between you and any danger that may come to you.

"Good-bye, Rose!" The other reason for my writing thus is one that may wound you when I write it, but it must be done. I know that you do not love me, that you are passionately in love with your husband, but I also know—I mean it has been borne in upon me—that sometime it may comfort you to know that one man carried your image supreme in his heart as long as life remained to him, and that as he went to his death his last thought was a longing for you, his last prayer a petition that you might be saved from hardship and unhappiness.

"You will never hear from me again, my darling—I may write this once, what I have so often called you in my heart—and such is the ironic fate confronting me, you will never know, nor can I tell you now, by what dread passageway I am to make the great transition. But that death is very near me. I am certain, else I never would risk sending this. Dying I may write words freely to you, which if I were living and facing you, your loyal loving soul could not read.

"What you have been to me, you never can know. I do not think a woman ever was so enshrined before in a man's aching heart. But though the bliss of your love has been denied me, the memories of your staunch friendship and of your sweetness are things which I shall take with me beyond the grave.

"Good-bye, rose of the world. I am sending you the kiss I never have given you.

"HUGH"

I dropped the letter in my lap and stared wild-eyed into space. Surely there was but one explanation of this letter.

Hugh Grantland must suddenly have gone mad!

Miss Florence Power will give a bridge on Saturday at her home.

Clubs Urge Women to Vote

Nebraska Federation of Women's Clubs is co-operating in the effort to "get out the vote." They have issued to each member in the state a card, reprinted from Collier's, which says:

"We Americans believe in majority rule. Our forefathers placed in our hands a mighty weapon to make majority rule effective. We're not using it. That weapon is the ballot. What are you doing with it?"

In each national election since 1896 the proportion of voters has dwindled. In 1896, 80 per cent of those qualified to vote did vote. In 1900, 75 per cent; in 1904, 65 per cent; in 1912, 62 per cent; in 1916, less than 50 per cent. Four years ago 54,421,822 American could have voted, but only 24,746,183 did so.

Such is the deplorable state of American democracy. Unscrupulous politicians get what they want by heading the masses of unthinking voters to the polls. Isn't it time more thinking voters were heard from? Vote! Instead of being a parlor patriot, a rocking chair Paul Revere, let each American prove his right citizenship.

Let's make 1924 the year of the big vote.

BEFORE BABIES WERE BORN

Mrs. Oswald Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Girardville, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my last two babies came. It keeps me in perfect health and I am on my feet getting meals and doing all my household work until an hour before the baby is born. A friend told me to take it and I have used ten bottles since I heard about it. I recommend the Vegetable Compound whenever I can. Just yesterday a friend was telling me how miserable she felt, and I said, 'If you start taking Lydia E. Pinkham's you will feel fine.' Now she is taking it." — Mrs. P. J. OSWALD, Jr., 406 West Ogden St., Girardville, Pa.

Mrs. Nicola Paluzzi Says

Mishawaka, Indiana.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness before my babies were born. I was weak and tired out all the time and it helped me. When I had inward inflammation the doctor treated me, but did not help me, so I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and it helped me at once." — Mrs. NICOLA PALUZZI, 415 E. Broadway, Mishawaka, Indiana.
