"After-the-Ball" Parties

Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Beaton, the Adolph Storz and the E. A. Wursters, parents of the Beaton, will be among the dutch treat group at the Omaha club.

The Jess Tuhels and the Elton Loucks will be the dinner guests of Miss Dorothy Weller on Friday evening preceding the ball.

Cornelia Baum to Have Philadelphia Girl as Ak-Sar-Ben Guest.

Miss Helen Horrocks of Philadelphia will arrive Friday morning to be the guest of Miss Cornelia Baum, who was her classmate at Mrs. Somers school, Washington, D. C. She will attend the ball that evening and dine later as the guest of Miss Josephine Schurman at the Omaha club.

On Monday Miss Virginia Barker will give a bridge-luncheon at her home for Miss Horrocks.

Miss Horrocks is the third Somers girl to come to Omaha for the ball. Miss Patricia Healey of Ogden, Utah, and Miss Addison Pelletier of Sioux City are the others.

The Powells Hosts.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Powell were dinner hosts on Saturday evening at their home.

Engagement.

The engagement of Ireta Mae Baker of Normal, Neb., to Joseph Kirchner of Omaha has been announced. The couple will reside in Omaha.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mallory and their parents, the A. D. Mallorys, will motor to Lincoln Saturday for the Illinois game. Mr. Mallory, jr., is a graduate of the University of Illinois.

Mrs. Howell Home to Grandchild

Mrs. R. Beecher Howell AND GRANDDAUGHTER AND Mrs. Sidney Cullingham DEVELL PHOTO

Mrs. R. Beecher Howell's greatest anticipation in her return to Omaha, following a season as the wife of a United States senator in Washington, was in seeing for the first time her grandchild, Charlotte Chase Cullingham, 11 weeks old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Cullingham. An impromptu call by the photographer found the baby cooling to her mother and grandmother in wide awake fashion, as the picture suggests.

Columbian Club.

Columbian club of Sacred Heart parish will give a card party Wednesday afternoon, October 1, in the parish hall at Twenty-second and Locust streets. Hostesses will be Mrs. John Kemler, Mrs. J. P. Moore, Mrs. Paul Moore, Mrs. D. M. Murphy, and Mrs. E. P. Maloney.

Flacks Have Son.

Mr. and Mrs. George Flack announce the birth of a son Tuesday at the Methodist hospital.

Central Congregational Meeting.
The ladies' society of the First Central Congregational church is making plans for the annual bazaar. It will be held in the church parlors for two days, December 4 and 5.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

A Hard Lesson.
Dear Miss Allen: I have been going about with a man for a year, but we had a quarrel over money and I apologized later, but I never see him any more. Do you think he no longer cares? His mother tells him to come to see me, and his father, too. I am fond of his parents and his sisters.

BROKEN-HEARTED.
You have learned a hard lesson, my dear, from a hard teacher—experience. You have learned that it doesn't pay to form hasty conclusions, snap judgments and proceed to lose your temper and berate your friends because of these mistaken and hasty conclusions without knowing all the facts. In fact, it never pays to lose one's temper. You will not be sure of holding your friends until you have learned to hold your temper.

Your friend, however, should not hold a grudge after you have apologized. If he is still angry with you, ask yourself whether you could ever really enjoy the friendship or love of a person so slow to forgive.

Do not take your friend too seriously and allow yourself to fall in love with him. For he is really too young to know his own mind or what love is. Do not speak to about this matter.

Keep his father and mother for friends. Keep a friendly thought—just that, no more—for him.

Troubled: Yes, I would be a wonder if I could answer your questions. Life is simpler than your letter, if you just behave yourself, treat others kindly and don't gossip. Your letter indicates to me that while you are talking about others you are really concerned over your own conduct. Try to get that peace that comes with a clear conscience.

Brown Eyes: Be natural and considerate of others and you will make friends. Are you a good dancer? Perhaps not. Try to improve that. And do you dress attractively? Are you always well groomed and fresh in appearance? When you talk to others try to draw them out and don't feel you have to do all the talking.

Mrs. Joseph Ellick is still sick at her home.

The Perplexing Problem Made Face
Involving Junior, Dicky and Mother Graham.

When Dicky's knock sounded its peremptory tattoo upon my door, I was thankful indeed that I already had thrust Hugh Grantland's letter behind the lining of my work basket, always a temporary hiding place with me.

But it was with an absurdly guilty feeling out of all proportion to the incident, that I closed the lid of the basket, and called a pleasant "Come in." The time might come when I should wish to show Dicky that wild strange letter, but it distinctly was not now—my imagination conjured up a terrifying vision of my husband's face should I hand over the screen for his perusal.

Dicky rattled the door knob impatiently.
"How can I come in?" he said with a roughness in his voice that betrayed some unusual annoyance. "You've got the door locked. What's the big idea, anyway?"

"I didn't know I locked it," I returned as I turned the key and opened the door, conscious that I was telling but a lame untruth, but frantic in my desire to keep Dicky from guessing my real reason for secluding myself so rigidly.

A Calm Question
"Oh no, you don't know?" he gibed. "That's a good one! But it's neither here nor there just now. What did you do to Junior, he's crying his eyes out in mother's room."

There was in Dicky's voice a faint "ONE ENTHUSIAST SAID: 'Anything 'round town, half so good looking, costs twice as much.' This is a Thorne Season Never Such Values in COATS and FROCKS. F. W. Thorne Co. 1812 Farnam St."

ilar accusing note which I recognized and braced myself to meet the unpleasant minutes I knew would follow. It was not a new situation this, but one which I feared would grow more difficult with the coming years.

For Dicky, whose love for his boy is an unreasoning idolatry, cannot bear to see him crossed in the slightest degree. Long before the child could walk or talk, he learned that he only had to cry to keep his father continually on the jump in an effort to soothe him, and with the cunning and persistence which belong unerringly to babyhood he made good use of his knowledge—and never has forgotten the lesson.

This state of affairs naturally has left all the disciplining of the child to me, something I would not regret were it not for the fact that Dicky, not content with indulging Junior himself, is constantly upsetting any restraining measures of mine.

But it was not my husband's irritating question alone that braced me for combat, but his just phrase "in mother's room." Consciously or unconsciously my mother-in-law is complicating the problem of my child's rearing in a way most distressing to me, and I instinctively knew that she was behind the present little contretemps.

"How does he happen to be in mother's room?" I asked, trying to make my voice calm and succeeding only in giving it a cutting edge. "I told him to go to play with Marion."

"Let me go!"
"Of course you'd have to spring that," Dicky said unpleasantly. "The fact that the child is practically in hysterics is nothing to you, where your jealousy of mother is concerned. Poor little chap! Why shouldn't myself so rigidly."

he be there? Mother saw him sobbing bitterly as he ran through the hall, and called him to her room."

Of all his little tirades, I marked only the last words.
"I can well believe that she called him," I said icily, "but that Junior was sobbing when she did it—pardon me if I discount that a bit. I have heard the tales of Junior's bitter sobbing before."

From down the hall came a high-pitched wail. Junior's and I recognized in it a wild hysterical note which sent me flying past Dicky to the door of my mother-in-law's room.

There is no calm equable temper in Junior's inheritance on either side, and from babyhood he has had frequent bursts of unreasoning rage, which, handicapped by interference from both Dicky and his mother I have been unable to curb altogether, although I have made some progress with each year of his life.

But as Junior's crying fits are permitted to get beyond control, they become really alarming until they present almost a medical problem, and it was with hot anger against my mother-in-law for the maudlin sympathy which had sent the child into his tantrum that I hurriedly threw back her partly-opened door and entered. Dicky close upon my heels.

But it was a far different scene than I expected which met my gaze. There was no trace of tears upon Junior's face, but he was furiously angry. Pinioned in his grandmother's arms—she has a surprisingly strong grip for so old and infirm a woman—Junior was attempting to strike, bite and kick, and foiled in all three pastimes, was lifting his voice in impassioned protest.

"I'm not poor abused baby!" he was shrieking. "I'm my mama's good boy, and I want to mind her. She said I was to go play with Marion. Let me go, you old bunch of soup greens, you!"
