Slandered Tariff on Aluminum Has Lowered Prices and Created Prosperous Market.

The tariff on aluminum, as imposed by the republican congress in 1922, has been used by John W. Davis, democratic nominee for president, and other democratic orators as campaign fodder.

They say that paragraphs 339 and 374 of the tariff act were put in because Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, is heavily interested in the aluminum industry. These two paragraphs refer to aluminum and products of that metal. The consumer has been depicted by the democrats as having to pay a lot more for aluminum ware because of this tariff.

The Omaha Bee has just concluded an investigation which would indicate that those who are trying to make aluminum one of the issues of the campaign have not delved very deeply into the matter. The price of aluminum ware in the Omaha stores today is just 30 per cent cheaper than it was the day that President Harding was inaugurated.

Aluminum Sales Increase.
The aluminum companies in August alone announced a 10 per cent decrease in the price of their products.

The republican tariff act, instead of making it harder for the housewife to buy high grade kitchen ware, seems to have made it easier. Another interesting fact developed by the survey is the following:
Aluminum sales in the last two years are reported by Omaha merchants to have increased steadily month by month.

That means that the consumer, finding he can buy aluminum articles cheaper than before, is buying more of them. The same is probably true in all parts of the country. If more articles are bought, the manufacturer must make more, and prosperity revolves around such things as this. More factory workers are employed, more raw metals are bought, and the millennium is more nearly approached than by the dumping on the American market of quantities of goods made where labor is dirt cheap.

Great Reduction.
An aluminum article, which sold for $4.80 in 1920 and $3.95 in 1922, now sells for $3.25.

Another illustration of the effect of the tariff on importations is demonstrated in a report made by Secretary Mellon to the senate finance committee on June 9, 1922. This report showed that a higher tariff should not necessarily increase the cost to the consumer. An aluminum sauce pot, for instance, was bought in Germany for 27 cents, and its landed value here, after freight, insurance and the old duty of 25 per cent was imposed, amounted to 40 cents. The article was retailed for $1.24, or a percentage of retail price to landed cost of 210 per cent.

An egg cutter, costing 9 and thirty-four one hundredths cents after all taxes and duties had been levied, sold for 49 cents, or a percentage of retail price to landed cost of 488 per cent.
