All Sorts of Furs Make Their Bow at Polo Game

The polo game yesterday brought out all the new 'tween season coats, and a few fur sports jackets.

Mrs. George Brandels, who was a member of Mrs. Ben B. Wood, Jr.'s supper at the Country club after the game, wore a black satin lynx trimmed model.

The Brandels' week-end guest, James Alexander of Chicago, was with Miss Elizabeth Davis, Miss Davis chose a costume suit of blue and wore over it a tan coat with raccoon collar.

Mrs. Wood had chosen a rosewood brown cloth coat over a suit of the same shade. She wore a very small felt hat.

Mr. and Mrs. Wood's honor guests were Fred and James Hubbell of the Des Moines team.

Mrs. Philip Metz of Buffalo wore a black wrap trimmed with white fox, and Mrs. Robert Garrett a leopard jacket.

Mrs. Louis Clarke, who is also an enthusiast about the sport, also wore a short fur coat.

The affair was most informal. The audience deserted the grandstands to sit on the bumpers of their cars lined closely about the field or walked about chatting in small groups.

Mrs. J. E. Megeath wore a green coat trimmed in leopard and a brown hat.

Miss Eleanor Burkley was in a tan ensemble. Over a smart dress in this shade she wore a trig tan coat without fur trim. Her footwear was in a matching shade.

Hundreds are expected at the polo matches on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Miss Burkley a Horse Show Winner

Other equestriennes appearing were Mesdames George B. Duncan, Frances Daugherty, Grace Allison Sibbensen, W. Parratt, J. Rachman and Mesdames Daphne Peters, Miriam Halstead, Miriam Field, Phyllis Goleman, Gertrude Stout, Georgiana Dorey. Among the children participating were the son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Copenhagen, Peggy Dooley, Mary Ellen Mason and Nate Mantel, Jr.

The horse show was a great success and proved highly interesting to the several thousand spectators.

betrayed the sudden drop of my mental barometer.

"I know your work is piling up," I said with quick assent, "but are you sure you'll be comfortable there?"—this last with the correct air of wifely solicitude.

"All the comforts of home, and some that home never saw," he returned with a sardonic little quirk of his lips. "Don't strain yourself worrying over me. I'll be all right, and perhaps I'll have a fighting chance for my life against those wolves of art editors snapping at the back of the sleigh. I've thrown everything edible to them except the baby, and he's in danger. And Alf's the worst of the lot, blast his ornery hide!"

"What's Eating Lella?"

Experience of Dicky's extravagant speech made me take this diatribe calmly, especially as I read beneath his words the secret gratification which was his at having his work so much in demand. But the mention of Alfred Durkee's name gave me a chance to inject a new note into our colloquy.

"Alf!" I repeated interestedly. "How are all the Durkees?"

"That's just what I was going to tell you," he retorted. "Alf's all broken up, and I rise to remark that if I were in his place I'd treat that spouse of his to a good—"

"Oh no, you wouldn't!" I interrupted serenely. "You'd do exactly as he is doing—make the best of things."

"You don't know me, woman," Dicky burlesqued, "but thank all the little gods you didn't have any ancestral southern home over which you yearned with such fervent yearns that nothing would do you but having Junior breath his first breath within its sacred walls. What's eating Lella anyway? She wasn't Dick's Surprise.

"But her mother was," I returned, "and her mother's people for generations back. And Lella spent half of her childhood there. I can understand how she wants to go there just now with Aunt Dora Paige to see to things."

"Oh I suppose so!" Dicky agreed, "but it's mighty tough on Alf just the same. He can't leave the office these days for any length of time, and he's so anxious about Lella he's nearly crazy."

"I imagine he'll survive," I said dryly, quickly adding: "Who's going with Lella?"

"Regular hard-boiled little cynic, aren't you?" Dicky quizzed. "Of course you'll hold that little episode of Bess Dean against the poor lad for the rest of his natural life."

"Nothing of the kind," I retorted, although I knew that I never had quite forgiven Alfred Durkee for the short-sightedness which had permitted Bess Dean to make gentle Lella so unhappy. "But—men have died and worms have eaten them, but not for love, you know."

"I don't notice any of your modern women pining away, either, old dear," and again there was the elusive and gratifying note of pique in his voice. "But all that isn't answering your question. Of course Ed's going down with Lella, and the only other member of her entourage will be—" he paused dramatically—"your august mother-in-law."

Dr. and Mrs. C. Rubendall have returned from a month's trip east.
