

Coolidge Plans One More Speech

Single Major Address to Complete President's Campaign for Re-Election.

Washington, Oct. 14.—One major speech and a series of short, impromptu addresses will complete President Coolidge's personal participation in his campaign for continuation in the White House, it was learned definitely today. The president will not, however, leave Washington, depending upon the press and the radio to get his views before the public.

The big concluding speech of his campaign will be delivered before eastern members of the United States Chamber of Commerce on October 24. Taxation, tariff, immigration and governmental economy will be discussed at that time.

With this one exception, however, the president will pursue diligently his "back porch" campaign, wherein he meets, and delivers brief addresses to comparatively small delegations to the south portico of the White House, or attends strictly local celebrations.

The president will leave Washington on the night of November 3, for Northampton, Mass., where he and Mrs. Coolidge will cast their votes on election day.

Callaway.—Callaway post, American Legion, is planning a big celebration in Callaway on armistice day, November 11.

Burgess Bedtime Stories

By THORNTON W. BURGESS. Patience in the end is a winner. When I really want a dinner—Hooty the Owl.

Patience and Impatience. In the little, underground tunnel little Whitefoot the Wood Mouse sat with his heart going pit-a-pat. "My stars! My stars!" he exclaimed. "That was a narrow escape! Yes, sir, that was a narrow escape. Hooty the Owl almost got me that time. I saw him just in time. It is a lucky thing for me that I was close to the entrance to this little tunnel. Goodness.

At last Whitefoot decided there was nothing to fear.

what a fright! I guess I'll have to stay here quite a while. It won't do to take any chances with Hooty the Owl about.

But it wasn't long before Whitefoot was quite over his fright. His heart stopped going pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat. You see Whitefoot has so many enemies looking for him that he becomes used to sudden frights of this kind. He is terribly frightened at the moment, but is soon over it. So it wasn't long before Whitefoot was becoming impatient to start out again. He was hungry.

Whitefoot grew more and more impatient. He went to the entrance of that little tunnel and poked his pretty little nose out. Presently he ventured to poke his whole head out. There he sat, looking and listening. All was still. It was still as only the Green Forest can be at night. It was moonlight. The moonlight lay in white patches in all directions. Between the white patches were the Black Shadows. It was just such a night as Whitefoot the Wood Mouse loves. It was just such a night as Timmy the Flying Squirrel, Jumper the Hare and the other little people, who like to be abroad at night instead of in daylight, love.

Whitefoot's stomach kept reminding him that it was empty. So his impatience grew. Hooty the Owl hadn't hooted again, and this made Whitefoot think that Hooty probably had gone to some other part of the Green Forest. He ventured wholly out, but still he hesitated to leave the safety of that little hole in the ground. That hole was right in the moonlight. Meanwhile, sitting on his tall watch tower was Hooty the Owl. Hooty was patient. He felt sure that Whitefoot would come out if only he waited long enough. He could see that little hole in the ground from where he sat. He saw Whitefoot's head when Whitefoot poked it out of the hole. He saw Whitefoot when he came out and sat down close by that hole. The sight of Whitefoot made Hooty hungrier than ever. But still he was patient. He guessed that Whitefoot also was hungry. He would wait for Whitefoot to get away from that hole. It was a great temptation to swoop down at him as he sat there in the moonlight. It certainly was a great temptation. But Hooty had learned by experience that patience gains what impatience loses, and so he patiently waited and waited.

At last Whitefoot decided there was nothing to fear. He darted over to the nearest Black Shadow. At that instant Hooty spread those great silent wings of his and like nothing so much as a great moving Black Shadow himself sailed out from his watch tower.

County Would Oust Deputy

Commissioners Claim Konecky No Longer Fit for Work.

The discharge of Deputy Sheriff Isaac Konecky was demanded in a resolution passed unanimously by the county commissioners Tuesday. The resolution was addressed to Sheriff Endres, calling on him to demand Konecky's resignation. "On and after November 1 the board will refuse to make any further payments on the salary of Isaac Konecky," the resolution concludes.

Obtains Judgments. Konecky, after long litigation in district court, has obtained judgments against the county totaling $1,254 for injuries to one leg, sustained when he stood in the road and tried to stop an automobile while he was detailed on traffic duties. The automobile didn't stop. Konecky has used a cane ever since he got out of the hospital.

Moreover, District Judge Stauffer, after hearing the medical testimony, decreed that Konecky has been permanently disabled 25 per cent.

"His Own fault." "The duties of deputy sheriff require an able-bodied person," the county commissioners say. "He's got enough out of the county," declared Commissioner Charles Unitt. "It was his own fault that he got injured. We paid him his salary all the time he was off duty besides. We won't pay him any more."

Once, following his injury, a prisoner escaped from the crippled deputy, but was caught some weeks later.

Ire of Omaha Grads Fired by Campaign

Alumni of "Dear Old Wisconsin" Resent "Appeal" to Loyalty to Alma Mater.

A plan to get money for the La Follette campaign from University of Wisconsin alumni by use of La Follette's association with that university, has aroused the ire of Wisconsin graduates in Omaha.

Many of the Wisconsin alumni in Omaha already have received an appeal for funds "for the sake of old U. W." This appeal is mailed from Chicago on the stationery of the La Follette-Wheeler national progressive committee.

"Nothing would increase the influence and spread the fame of the university more than La Follette's election," declares this appeal for funds, to which is attached a blank check. Herman L. Eiern signs the letter as director of the La Follette finance committee.

Wisconsin men and women interviewed on this unusual method of raising funds expressed a combination of anger, mortification and amusement.

"Madder Than a Hornet." "I am madder than a hornet over this thing," said E. G. McGilton, attorney. "The minute I received this appeal for funds I wrote a letter stating my disapproval of the thing. I stated that my sympathies were not with La Follette in his campaign; that I considered this business of appealing to Wisconsin loyalty in bad taste, and that instead of taking pride in La Follette's campaign Wisconsin alumni should blush with shame. I believe that other members of the Wisconsin club here will feel the same way about it."

"I consider this appeal abominable," said M. A. Hall, another Omaha attorney. "Such tactics are entirely unwarranted. I cannot approve, despite the fact that while at Wisconsin I became quite well acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. La Follette and have a high personal regard for them."

"I feel both amused and mortified at this use of the university association," said Mrs. C. R. Belden, another Wisconsin alumnus.

"Will Do School No Good." "I wouldn't think of subscribing to it," said Sidney Gordon. "I'm not in favor of the method, and it certainly can't do the school any good."

A. S. Ritchie, president of the Wisconsin club and another personal friend of La Follette, announced that despite his friendship for the candidate he would not consider contributing as a result of this appeal. "I don't think it will be of any avail, although a few shekels might be forthcoming from alumni living in Wisconsin," he said. "I don't know this Eiern who signs the letter and I don't think he is connected in any way with the university."

The letter not only asks for contributions—it goes further and urges that the contributions be "substantial" ones. It asks that the checks be made payable to W. T. Rawleigh, national treasurer, at the Hotel Morrison, Chicago. On the enclosed blank check is the touching appeal, in large black letters: "For Old U. W." The approach is also depicted, the letter beginning as follows: "The University of Wisconsin gains immeasurably in prestige by the candidacy of Robert M. La Follette, U. W., '79, for president of the United States." The letters are typewritten separately to each alumnus.

In Omaha there are about 40 members of the Wisconsin club.
