Dr. Hull Honors Mrs. Wilbur S. Davidson.

Dr. C. A. Hull will give a supper party on Sunday evening at the Omaha club for Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Davidson's guest, Mrs. Wilbur S. Davidson, of Port Huron, Mich.

Mrs. J. E. Davidson motored to Lincoln today to bring her guest back from a three days' stay with the Tom Woods.

Traveler Honored.

Miss Lillian Head will entertain Friday for Mrs. Richard Guttman of Vienna, who leaves soon for her home following a six months' visit here.

Mrs. Guttman, her little son, Fritz, and her mother, Mrs. William Keating, will make the trip. They are sailing on the Aquitania, leaving New York October 29, a month earlier than they had first announced.

Miss Rhoades Hostess.

Miss Mildred Rhoades will entertain at dinner Saturday evening at the Athletic club for Mrs. Gail Balenger of San Francisco, who is to be the guest that day of Mrs. Morton Rhoades, who will give a bridge luncheon at her home.

A Wife's Confessional

Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE (Copyright, 1924.)

What the Footprints on the Roof Disclosed to Madge.

So Marion had been right, after all, in thinking she had seen a face looking through my bedroom window. I made a mental apology to the child as by the aid of my flashlight, I saw the print of feet on the veranda roof outside the window. It was all the more fervent an acknowledgment because I knew that I must never frighten her by telling her that she had been correct in her surmise.

Conjecture, fantastic and terrifying, began to have its way with me. Marion had referred to the lurking figure as "he," and the word brought a slender reassurance. Curiously enough I did feel fear at the thought of an ordinary burglarious marauder.

The presence above all others which I dreaded was that of a woman, the woman who had trailed her sinister shadow across my life since the first year of my marriage. If Grace Draper had escaped the espionage of Harry Underwood who had told me he would make it impossible for her to come near me.

I caught my breath in hysterical relief as I saw that the footprints while not large for a man, were still not made by Grace Draper's slender, high-arched feet.

I raised the sash still further, and clambered out upon the roof, scrutinizing the footprints carefully. At first I thought they were made by bare feet, then I realized that there were no separate toe prints such as naked feet would have left. On the other hand, shoes of the ordinary kind never had those flat, shapeless impressions. Bedroom slippers—wooden ones, moccasins, sandals—some one of the three varieties of foot-gear had been worn by the mysterious marauder.

Leaning over the flat roof, I swept my flashlight from side to side, although I knew it to be a futile gesture. Then a window at the outer end of the veranda, Dicky's, shot suddenly upward, and my husband leaned out, changing a grunt "What's there?" to an astonished:

"Madge! What in blazes are you doing on that roof? Stand perfectly still until I come and get you. Why, you blasted little idiot, you're likely to fall and break your neck!"

Why Madge Hesitated.

Why is it, I wonder, that roughness if accompanied by alarm for her safety, always finds a woman when evinced by the man she loves. I adored the raucousness of Dicky's voice, but I answered him lightly, as I moved toward the window.

"Don't be silly. The roof isn't a bit slippery and I'm never dizzy."

He sprang from the window as I spoke, and now came swiftly toward me grasping my arm firmly as he reached me.

"That may all be, but just take it from me," he quoted grimly, "you're going to go through this window faster than you came out. What's the big idea anyway, of this Diogenes lantern business. Were you expecting to find an honest man on the veranda roof?"

"No, a dishonest one." The retort rose to my lips, but I closed them upon it, with a curious reluctance to let Dicky know the real reason for my ridiculous excursion.

I told myself that it was because I did not wish to have him go rushing around the grounds and into possible danger, as he certainly would do if I showed him the footprints I had seen, and over which we were even now walking. But there was something deep in my consciousness which was stronger even than my fear for him, something that bade me wait and investigate by myself the odd thing which had happened.

"I'll Take Mother In."

"I thought the cat was on the roof and couldn't get down," I prefabricated smoothly, as Dicky assisted me through the window. He looked down at me oddly.

"Tell another one, old dear," he advised carelessly. "You need practice. You've too much Puritan in your makeup to reel 'em off in the style affected by your noble young husband. But keep your little secret—this with a magnanimous wave of the hand. 'Far be it from me to pry when you get your Sherlock Knickers on. How about the mending?"

"Part of the things are done," I said. "The rest I'll finish tonight. Here, you can pack all of these, and I'll bring the rest to you as fast as I finish them."

He looked down at the pile of clothing I put in his arms with an abashed, rueful expression.

"By Jove, I did hand you an armful, didn't I?" he queried. "I'm really ashamed of myself about this afternoon. I'll tell you what, I'll take mother in, myself. I'll drive me nearly wild, but I guess I can stand her shopping around for one day."

THE HOUSEWIFE.

Miss Alice Borup Visits Sister.

Miss Alice Borup of St. Paul, Minn., returned by motor with her sister, Miss Maud Borup, and her fiancé, C. T. Kountze, whose engagement had been announced in St. Paul while they were spending the week-end there.

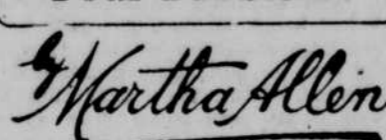

Miss Borup is associated with her sister in the candy business. She will return to her home Friday evening.

Lundquist-Smith.

Mrs. Prudence Wintersten Smith and Edward Wade Lundquist, whose engagement was announced recently, were married Wednesday at Des Moines. The newlyweds expect to return to Omaha the last of the week and then go to Sioux Falls, S. D., for a visit with the groom's mother, Mrs. Theresa Lundquist. They will reside in Kansas City.

Mrs. Lundquist is the widow of the late Floyd A. Smith of Omaha. Mr. Lundquist had resided in Omaha about four years.

Your Problems

Martha Allen

To "Troubled Heart."

Dear Miss Allen: I was very much interested a day or two since in a letter signed "Troubled Heart."

One has to be "born again" to enjoy the house of the Lord.

A man is a practical creature; he looks about him and sees the present tumult in the churches, the dissension, style, expense, conduct of Christian people, greed, long creeds, long winding road to reach the throne of grace. He tries to "figure it out" in his own mind; by his helpless reasoning therefore fails.

No one thinks to tell him the way of salvation is so simple. All Christ asked was to "Believe, and be baptized with water and the Holy Spirit—that's all."

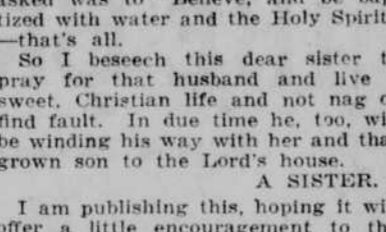

So I beseech this dear sister to pray for that husband and live a sweet, Christian life and not give or find fault. In due time he, too, will be winding his way with her and that grown son to the Lord's house.

A SISTER.
