

Coolidge Appears to Be Certain of Winning at Polls

Possibility of La Follette's Deadlocking Election Fading Now; Must Carry West to Do So

(Continued From Page One.) W. Bryan possessed the following "certain democratic states": Texas, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia. In other words, the "solid south," with its 114 electoral votes. Those states stayed with Cox in 1920 when standing with Cox was about the most unpopular pastime ever devised by democratic politicians.

These Davis states, with their electoral vote, follow: Virginia, 12; West Virginia, 12; Oklahoma, 8; Arkansas, 10; Louisiana, 10; Maryland, 10; Kentucky, 12; North Carolina, 12; South Carolina, 12; Florida, 12; Georgia, 12; Alabama, 12; Texas, 34.

When Coolidge and Daves began stock taking in early July they found a substantial nucleus of votes in the New England states. It has been put down as "sure" and a big cradle of other states in which victory, while not so certain as in New England, could reasonably be expected. And it is that cradle of "reasonably certain" states which leads to the conclusion that Coolidge will serve four more years in the White House.

The following are states which may be written down for Coolidge and Daves after a study of available unbiased reports: Pennsylvania, 20; Vermont, 6; Massachusetts, 14; Connecticut, 7; Rhode Island, 4; New Jersey, 14; New York, 36.

NEW ENGLAND STATES—In only two of these states, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, has there ever been a serious question as to Coolidge's victory. New Hampshire voted for Woodrow Wilson in 1916 and elected a democratic governor in 1922, but New Hampshire now appears to be again republican. The Klan troubles and the internecine political warfare which have torn Rhode Island and which gave the Democrats some hope, now appear to have left republican strength in this state unaffected to any great extent.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY—These two may, for all practical purposes, be considered as one, since they always go together in national elections. Both voted for Hughes in 1920 and Harding was overwhelmingly victor over Cox when Al Smith ran way ahead of the national ticket.

OHIO—With two favorite sons in the race in 1920, Ohio stepped to Cox's toes to the tune of 1,132,000 to 694,000. Ohio goes for the republican column with its 24 votes.

ILLINOIS—Illinois repudiated Hughes in 1916 and gave him 200,000 majority in a year of democratic victory. Illinois has been a scene of bitter fighting, but Coolidge started with an advantage and there is nothing to indicate that he has lost it.

MICHIGAN—La Follette leaders in Michigan have been making extravagant claims, but they are largely discounted by the primary showing of the progressive Senator Couzens. La Follette will not run more strongly than Couzens and the Couzens majority was not sufficient to swing the state to the Wisconsin senator.

KANSAS—Bordering on the klanter Oklahoma is Kansas, with klan troubles of its own and William Allen White with his independent candidacy for governor to add to the confusion. Conservative reports, however, show Coolidge in the lead and the state is put in the republican column.

election. They can come from the middle and far western states where La Follette is running with a considerable show of strength, or from states in the doubtful column where the issues between Daves and Coolidge are doubtful states are: Idaho, 3; Delaware, 3; Missouri, 10; Total, 42; Colorado, 10; Total, 52.

INDIANA—In Indiana the klan fight and the impeachment and subsequent imprisonment of ex-Governor Warren McElroy have beset the republican leaders. Latest reports indicate, however, that these fights are outside the national ticket and may not affect the candidacy of Coolidge. Indiana is doubtful, but the chance is greater that it will go for Coolidge than for Davis.

COLORADO—This state, which has been more or less of an enigma, now shows signs of climbing out of the doubtful column and into the Coolidge ranks. It would not be at all surprising if Coolidge were to pick up these eight votes.

DELAWARE—Delaware is another that now shows Coolidge leanings, and Arthur Sears Henning, in the Chicago Tribune, flatly places it in the republican column. However, it cannot be placed there with the same certainty as those listed above as G. O. P. states.

MISSOURI—Missouri has been mentioned before. Some observers give it to Coolidge, others to Davis. No one really knows and no one will know until after next Tuesday.

La Follette States. This brings us to La Follette and the states generally conceded to him. They are: Wisconsin, 12; North Dakota, 5; Minnesota, 12; Total, 29.

Of the three Wisconsin probably the only one that can be written "sure," since the prevailing high prices for grain have cost La Follette a number of votes in Minnesota and North Dakota. Probably not enough, however, to bring these two states back to Coolidge, where they would normally go.

There remain 12 states, with 71 electoral votes, where the La Follette element enters in. Of the 12 Davis has an opportunity of gaining only two, Arizona and Nevada. Coolidge has a chance in every one of the remaining 10. Those states are: Nebraska, 7; Oregon, 5; South Dakota, 5; Arizona, 3; Montana, 3; New Mexico, 3; Idaho, 3; Nevada, 3; California, 12; Total, 71.

NEBRASKA—Despite optimistic claims of democratic leaders, including Governor Bryan, I see only Coolidge and La Follette in Nebraska. The democratic element is pinning its hopes on a swing from La Follette to Davis, with enough republican votes staying with the Wisconsin senator to put Davis into the lead. Whatever drift there may be is more probably from La Follette to Coolidge, with Davis well settled in third place. As this is written Coolidge appears to be gaining and I expect him to come through with a comfortable majority.

IOWA—Iowa, like Nebraska, early showed considerable strength for La Follette, which has dwindled as crop prices rose. However, there is enough La Follette sentiment extant in this state which has no candidate for the United States senate endorsed by the state republican committee to warrant its being placed in the Coolidge or La Follette column, even though the Coolidge chances are excellent.

SOUTH DAKOTA—The situation here is much like that in Nebraska, with the exception, however, that Davis is not in the race. NORTHWESTERN STATES—Montana is a problem. It is the home state of La Follette's running mate, Wheeler, and its democratic candidate, Walsh, has been endorsed by La Follette. The chances are good that Montana will give La Follette a majority in the state.

CALIFORNIA—In California a court decision which forces La Follette state, there are no indications of a swing back to Coolidge. In Idaho, the republican party has the support of Senator Borah, whose influence may keep this state out of the La Follette column. Wyoming is still a guess. La Follette managers here are confident. So are leaders in the Coolidge campaign. After discounting the claims of both it may be said that three Coolidge votes from Wyoming are not at all unlikely.

SOUTHWESTERN STATES—Nevada will probably go with La Follette and deprive Davis of three votes that he may be counting on. TEXAS—The republican column in Texas shows a strong La Follette tinge, with Coolidge having a fair chance of carrying the state. CALIFORNIA—In California a court decision which forces La Follette state, there are no indications of a swing back to Coolidge. In Idaho, the republican party has the support of Senator Borah, whose influence may keep this state out of the La Follette column. Wyoming is still a guess. La Follette managers here are confident. So are leaders in the Coolidge campaign. After discounting the claims of both it may be said that three Coolidge votes from Wyoming are not at all unlikely.

"I tried to Lock Him in But Couldn't Find My Key," Says Grocer Shot by Bandit; Staggered After Help

Bullet Just Misses Aorta; He Describes Holdup to Wife.

"I tried to lock him in the store, but I couldn't find my keys," explained Charles H. Mallinson, 46, who was shot and seriously wounded by a bandit who held him up in his grocery store at 202 North Seventeenth street Saturday night.

Mallinson's condition was reported improved Monday morning by attaches of Lord Lister hospital. The gunman's bullet passed through Mallinson's chest, missing the aorta, the largest artery in the human body, by one-quarter inch, examination disclosed. The missile was removed Sunday from under the skin between Mallinson's shoulder blades.

Mrs. Mallinson has been in almost constant attendance at her husband's bedside since he was shot. The grocer was able to tell her an accurate account of what occurred in the store during the robbery Sunday.

"I had dismissed the clerks and was closing the store. A man rattled the front door, which was locked, and I went to the door to explain that the store was closed," said Mallinson. "The next thing I knew he was in the store."

"Where's your key?" he demanded, flourishing a revolver. "I told him it was in the cash register and started to raise my hands. His gun spit almost in my face. I felt the thud of the bullet striking my chest. The man rifled the register and I lay on the floor. He got more than $100."

"Where's the safe?" he then asked. I told him it was on the balcony and back to Coolidge, where they would normally go.

"D—n you! Come up here and open this!"

Calls Hotel Clerk. "I managed to get to my feet and run out of the door, expecting a shot in the back any second. I wanted to lock him in and hold him until help came, but I couldn't find my keys. So I ran to the Plomar hotel office, told the clerk to call police, and ran back to the store."

"I met him as he came out, but I was too weak to hold him." The robber ran north on Seventeenth street and turned west on Davenport. Police have made no arrests.

There was about $500 in the safe, according to Mallinson.

The picture shows the Mallinson grocery, 202 North Seventeenth street, taken from a position near the door. Charles Schilling, a clerk, is standing in the spot at which Mallinson is believed to have stood when the bandit shot him down. Insert is a photograph of Charles H. Mallinson, seriously wounded by the highwayman's bullet.

There somehow the paw had been caught in it and Bobby had been unable to get rid of that can.

worms in when I was fishing. When I was through fishing I dropped that can in the water. I didn't dream that it could possibly hurt any one. So I am to blame, Bobby, for all the fright and pain you have suffered. And the least I can do is to get you out of this trouble I got you into. My, I certainly am glad Bowser and I came this way this morning!"

As he talked in a low, soothing voice he kept slowly drawing nearer and nearer to Bobby Coon. He made no quick movements. Finally he knelt down close to Bobby and there he remained for some little time without trying to touch Bobby. All the time he kept talking to him gently. He watched Bobby's eyes. He saw the savage, fighting look fade away. He saw distrust gradually grow less and less. He knew that Bobby Coon was beginning to understand that he had nothing to fear. He didn't touch Bobby, but just talked to him. As he talked he was studying to find some way of setting Bobby free from that awful little can.

"That leg is pretty badly swollen," said he, "I'm afraid it is useless to try to pull that can off. I guess we will have to cut it off. I mean the can, Bobby, not your leg. I haven't a thing here to do it with, so I guess I will have to take you up to the house. I wish I knew just what you are thinking. I don't want to feel those sharp teeth of yours. If I knew that you knew just what I want to do I wouldn't hesitate to pick you up. But I am afraid you don't understand!"

He slowly put out a hand toward Bobby Coon. Bobby growled and the look of fear leaped up in his eyes.

He slowly put out a hand toward Bobby Coon.

Farmer Brown's Boy shook his head sorrowfully. "I thought it would be this way," said he. "I don't blame you a bit. You can't understand what has happened to you, and of course you can't understand what I want to do for you. I guess there is nothing for it but for me to wrap you up in my coat so that you can't bite and then take you up to the house."

So Farmer Brown's Boy gently brushed his coat over Bobby Coon's head and then wrapped him up in such a way that Bobby couldn't bite or struggle. All the time he did his best not to hurt that injured leg. Then he picked Bobby up, and with Bowser the Hound at his heels started for home. Peter Rabbit, watching wide-eyed from the end of a hollow log saw them go. Peter's curiosity was satisfied. He knew now who it was who had growled at him under the pile of brush. He knew that Bobby Coon was in trouble, but what the trouble was Peter didn't know. And so Peter was glad as he saw Farmer Brown's Boy taking Bobby Coon away, for Peter knew that Bobby was in the hands of a friend.

AT THE THEATERS

Martha Hedman, the tall, fair-haired beauty, well remembered for her charm and talent as star of "The Boomerang" and who is at the Orpheum theater this week, grew up in the maternal ventures of that celebrated Swedish playwright brought him almost as much notoriety as his dramas did celebrity. Strange as it may seem, Miss Hedman knew and liked all three wives. Recently she entertained at luncheon Frieda, Strindberg's second wife, whom immortal Swedish dramatist considered the most beautiful and the keenest-minded woman he had ever known, as well as the poorest and most inefficient housekeeper on earth. After the luncheon, which had been prepared by Miss Hedman, herself, Frieda exclaimed: "Martha, just think, if I were capable of preparing and serving a luncheon as splendid as this, I might still be Madame Strindberg!"

It is not too long after the war for a play of the quality of "Simon Called Peter," which William A. Brady is presenting at the Brandeis theater tonight and tomorrow, matinee and night, to appeal to everyone. Julie is a remarkable heroine—one no one will forget. Though she is a nurse from South Africa, she is essentially French in her characteristics. Julie stands for a woman's love, for its intoxication, its wayward fancy, and its tenderness, and she is very human in the play. "Simon Called Peter" should interest us all, because it deals with conditions of the lives of those whom all of us have been far too prone to forget.

He has his audiences with him every second and is easily one of the funniest comedians the big playhouse has offered in a long time.

"The Flirting Flapper" is making Broadway audiences laugh long and loud this week. It is a fast moving musical farce with a host of funny complications. The numerous musical numbers are likewise meeting with hearty reception. Joe Martin does a funny role that is productive of much fun. Rudy Winter is an old man. Whitley Holtman scores under a coating of cork. Amateurs Friday night will present Noodles Fagan as the announcer and Fagan promises more than a good time.

Mother Admits Slaying Infant

"Didn't Think It Had Fair Chance," She Explains to Police.

By International News Service. Waukegan, O., Oct. 27.—"I didn't think the baby would have a fair chance, so I killed it," Mrs. Homer Tobias, a meek little woman of 27, confessed to police today after Dr. R. C. Paul discovered finger marks on the throat of her two-week-old son, who died Saturday afternoon at the county infirmary.

Mrs. Tobias was taken to the county infirmary two months ago after a violent quarrel at the family home near Sterling. Neighbors found her lying in the yard almost unconscious. She said her husband had beaten her because he charged the child she was expecting was not his and that he would make no provision for it. The husband was found over to the grand jury. Recently a reconciliation was effected.

Tobias saw the baby last week, and, according to the mother, said it did not resemble him and that he did not believe it was his. "I held its nose with two fingers and with my other hand I choked it," the mother calmly confessed, according to police. "It died in about two minutes."

A charge of first degree murder has been placed against her.
