Miss Nightingale Sings Thursday Night.

Miss Helen Nightingale, Omaha singer, will give her first public recital in the Y. W. C. A. auditorium on Thursday evening, October 30, under auspices of the Omaha Business Woman's club. She will be accompanied by Dorothy Morton Parks.

It was Miss Nightingale who won the gold medal for class B in the state contest held in the spring of 1923 by the Nebraska state music teachers, in session in Omaha.

When, in 1923, the combined high schools gave the memorable pageant, "Nebraska," with 600 students taking part giving two performances at the Strandis theater and three in the Municipal auditorium to vast audiences, to Helen Nightingale was assigned a leading solo part, that of "The Spirit of Corn." Many who witnessed the production will recall how creditably Helen carried the part.

Your Problems

A Fickle Admirer.

Dear Miss Allen: I am 17 and have been going about steadily with a man of 20 for three months. He has always been very kind to me and said as he did everything for me and he has won my love.

As we are both young, we decided to go about together for about two years and save money, then get married when I am about 19.

Lately he has acted differently, as though he didn't care much. And now he has stopped coming to see me for apparently no reason.

He is going about with another girl. What should I do?
HEARTBROKEN.

All you can do is to let him go and try to forget him. After all, you are too young to devote all your time and attention to any one young man, and even at 19 you would be young to undertake the responsibilities of married life.

He's really not a very reliable friend, after all, if he treats you that way without cause. So just be glad that you found out before you married him how undependable he is. And go about with all your friends and have happy times.

Bad Language, Never!

Dear Martha Allen: As a constant reader of your column I come to you for answers to questions which I have wondered about. Is a boy respectful if he puts his arm around his lady friends when with her? Also if he swears when with her? Also boys' special expressions, is he respectful? Hoping to see this in print, I am,
A READER.

If I told you it was always wrong for one person to kiss another you'd know I was wrong. Sometimes it's right, sometimes wrong. The same is true of the first question you ask. Whether or not it is wrong for a boy to put his arm around the girl depends upon their relationship. If they are engaged it would be considered proper. The girl knows whether the boys' attitude toward her and hers toward him makes it right. Bad language, never! It is highly improper to use it before a girl and just as bad before a man. Vulgarity is vulgarity wherever found.

HILLS BROS COFFEE

"In all the world, no coffee like this!"

THE first savory sip of Hills Bros. Red Can Coffee invariably calls forth some such spontaneous remark. It is wonderful coffee. That's why the coffee-critical West calls it The Recognized Standard.

That taste-teasing aroma is but the promise of a matchless flavor to follow—the flavor that has made "Red Can" the prideful coffee of the West. We lock the flavor in vacuum to preserve its freshness always.

With all its high quality, Hills Bros. Coffee is not high-priced. It is economical to buy—and economical to use. Hills Bros., San Francisco.

Madge's Unexpected Meeting With Bess Dean.

I seized upon my mother-in-law's suggestion with avidity, tossing her a grateful and comprehending glance as I did so. I well knew that she had proposed my returning to the farm so soon solely because of her desire to spare me further discussion with Edith Fairfax of the girls' unexpected plan to return north as soon as she could safely leave Lela.

"What nonsense," little Mrs. Durkee said hospitably. "Of course, you and I, Mother Graham, are going to catch the next train into town, but there's no reason why Madge can't stay with the girls for a little visit."

Why, see how early it is! Edith and Lela promptly seconded her argument, and I knew that Lela was sincere in the invitation. But I also knew that Edith Fairfax would draw as deep a breath of relief when she had seen the last of me as would I when I had turned my back upon the house that held her, and I was adamant to all their urging.

"You might as well save your breath to cool your broth," Mother Graham struck in. "When Margaret makes up her mind to anything, you might as well try to move the old Medes and Persians. But she's perfectly right in starting this early, as I told her just now. Don't forget though, Margaret—"

"There followed a string of injunctions concerning the repairing and packing of the clothing she had left with me, to which I listened as gravely as if she had not given the whole list to me before we left the farmhouse. But I was so grateful to her for her sympathy and resourceful aid that I would have listened as patiently if the list had been 10 times as long."

"I forgot that steak." Glad, indeed, was I, however, when the last item checked and the last goodbye spoken, we rolled away from the Durkee home, Marion on the seat with me and Katie proudly taking care of Junior in the tonneau. I felt that I could not have endured talking commonplaces to Edith Fairfax another minute, and in half that time I had resolved to put resolutely aside any speculation concerning any ulterior meaning in her sudden change of plans.

The resolution was a wise one. Indeed, I could have done nothing else, for we scarcely had left the gates of the Durkee home before Junior, Marian and Katie—Katie the most infantile child of the three—began to ply me with excited questions concerning the picnic I had promised them.

"I'm not going to tell you anything more," I said at last. "Wait until we get there. But you may all get out if you wish when we stop at the butcher's in Bayview to get the steak."

"Vy we no stop in Marvin?" Irrespressible Katie asked in spite of my prohibition. Weakly I took the easiest way and gave her an answer instead of a reproof.

"Because I forgot that steak until we were too far out of the village," I said. "But the butcher shop in Bayview has very good meats. I do not know about the towns in between."

"You bet your boots dot Bayview butcher is kitten's cream," Katie commented. "You remember ven you used teach down dere und bring dot Missis Alice Holcombe and dot rat-faced Bess Dean home for dinner, you used to bring shoot nice tick steak mit you to broil?"

They reach Bayview. I remembered very clearly and I paid a mental tribute to the keen ness of my little maid's perceptions as evidenced by her discrimination of reference to Alice Holcombe, whom she had deeply respected, and Bess Dean, whom she had as cordially detested. With a wisdom born of experience, I made no comment upon her little speech, save a brief, "It will be just as nice a steak now, I am sure, Katie," and spoke no more until we reached Bayview.

The sight of the village in which I had spent a year of such diverse experiences, pleasant and horrifying, brought me but one emotion—the desire to get through it as quickly as possible. I could not forget that Bess Dean still made her home in the village and taught in the high school.

That the malicious dillike Bess Dean always had held for me was now changed to active, bitter enmity because of the means I had taken to thwart her mischievous interference with Lela Durkee's happiness I well knew, and I dreaded an accidental encounter with her. That she would cut me publicly, if she could, I was sure; and while I cared nothing for that if she were alone, such a proceeding would be most embarrassing if she were accompanied by some of our old school colleagues.

With this thought in mind, I drove my car as quickly as I dared through the village streets, until I reached the butcher shop of my pleasant remembrance.

The bustle of our alighting—for all three of my charges availed themselves of my promise that they could come with me—kept me from observing closely the interior of the shop. Therefore it was several seconds before I saw Bess Dean standing at the farther end of the shop and looking at me intently.
