College Club

Miss Stella Hall Knight will be the hostess to the book review section of the Omaha College club at the home of her sister, Mrs. E. V. Shay, 5124 1/2 Third street on Wednesday, November 5, at 4 p. m. Miss Katherine Hilliard will review "Jefferson Davis by a Union Soldier."

Mrs. Winthrop Lane will be hostess to the home section Wednesday, November 5, at 1:30 p. m. Mrs. S. B. Hughes is in charge of the meeting and will have as her speakers, Dr. C. de Moore, who will talk on the "Preschool Age," and Dr. C. W. Bell, who will talk on "The Adolescent Child."

On Thursday at 2 p. m. at the home of Mrs. George Mickel the music section will be entertained. Miss Mary Van Wagenen, who recently came to Omaha from Stony Creek, N. Y., will give and illustrate talk on "Music and the Drama." During the coming winter Miss Van Wagenen will be director of music in the club. Following Miss Van Wagenen's talk the choral club will have a rehearsal.

Mrs. Hull Returns

Mrs. Charles A. Hull has returned from New York, where she has been for the past six weeks doing individual work in the art of expression with Miss Maude Scheerer. Poise, voice, correctness of speech and self-expression through the principles of dramatic interpretation are the lines along which Miss Scheerer works.

Mrs. Hull enjoyed performances by Mme. Simone, French emotional actress, and her French troupe, who are appearing in New York for six weeks. She met at tea Dwight Fiske, young American composer, home from three years in Paris, and on another occasion met Pierre Key, editor of the Musical Digest.

On Wednesday Mrs. Hull will leave to spend the remainder of the week in Lincoln.

Celebrates 86th Birthday

Mrs. Alex Lindburg entertained 16 guests Monday afternoon for Mrs. Charlotte Lindburg who was celebrating her 86th birthday. Mrs. Lindburg was a pioneer in Page county, Ia., but now resides in Omaha.

For Mrs. Brown

Mrs. James Trimble will entertain 35 guests at luncheon at her home Thursday, honoring Mrs. John D. Brown of Hannibal, Mo., who is the guest of Mrs. Edward Bedford.

Honors Mrs. Gaupel

M. E. Rummage Sale

Wednesday will be bargain day at the First Methodist church rummage sale. Twenty-five cents will be the standard price for every article. Wednesday closes the three-day sale which has been in progress at 524 South Sixteenth street.

Chapter B. P. P. E. O. Wednesday Chapter B. P. P. E. O. will meet Wednesday with Mrs. J. M. Prime for a 1 o'clock luncheon.

Vogues and Vanities

Clever conceits in lipsticks look like gold pencils.

Novelty umbrellas conceal vanities in the handles.

Verbena is a delightfully clean fragrance for bath soaps.

Carved ivory bracelets are tinted with brown to give an antique air.

To Remove Brown Stains From Porcelain

Often brown stains will appear on china or porcelain which are difficult to remove with ordinary washing. If rubbed well with a piece of lemon they will soon disappear.

Novels of Delight Are Named

"The young girl and the old maid are two new types which current fiction is giving us," said Mrs. Anthony French Merrill in her Monday morning lecture at Hotel Blackstone. "To the continental, the only type of woman suited to fiction was the kind for whom love was the whole existence."

In Sedgewick's "The Little French Girl," both the new types are found, according to Mrs. Merrill. "The girl is an exquisite figure," said Mrs. Merrill. "She went from a French civilization so different, so fine, into a roistering English home where everything was looked in the face. You surrender to the book and are taken with the little girl everywhere she goes. It is a novel of delight."

Another novel of delight named, was "Andorra," by Isabelle Sandy. "The wild beauty of the setting of this story is seldom equaled," said Mrs. Merrill.

V. B. Caldwell, jr., and Cutbert Potter left Saturday for two weeks' hunting in Colorado, as guests of T. B. McPherson and W. B. McPherson.

Your Problems

Bride's First Dinner.
Dear Miss Allen: Will you please tell me how to serve a simple dinner in courses. Please answer as soon as possible, as I am to have company and don't know the least thing about serving.

First, consider the number of courses you are to have. If you serve a fruit or oyster cocktail, serve that first with crackers.

Soup is served next, also with crackers, and may be your first course instead of cocktail, if you wish. Olives, celery and such relishes are served with this course.

Meat and vegetables are your main course. With them serve hot biscuits, or rolls or cold bread, if you prefer. Have jelly appropriate to your meat, pickled peaches and such appetizers.

Salad is usually served next, though in some parts of the country it is served first. Serve your salad on cold plates, and crackers, or salad wafers with it.

Your dessert follows, with coffee at the close of the dinner. Candied ginger and nuts are sometimes added. Many people like to finish a meal with crackers and cheese, and some with fresh fruit.

Have a bread and butter plate a little to the left of a glass a little to the right. On the right place the necessary knives and the soup spoon, if soup is to be served. To the left place the necessary forks.

Serve all dishes that are passed from the left of the person.

If you have no servants, make the service as simple as possible. Have everything on the table in order to minimize delay and effort on the part of the hostess. It is much better to have only a modest dinner and make it seem an easy task than to let your guests know you are worried, troubled and hurried and bound to give them a big spread.

Your linen should be spotless.

B Battery: Chicago is about 500 miles from Omaha. Fare with sleeper is a little less than $25, one way. You could doubtless drive through, for less if you have your own car, but if you are short of funds and can't afford to take a risk, the train is the safer choice. Via automobile you would have to make for several days to pay for, and at this time of year you might be held up on account of weather.

A Wife's Confessional REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

Why Madge Followed Lee Chow's Suggestion.

It was the awed sensation of being in the presence of something both momentous and terrifying that prompted the anonymous print of myself (which the mysterious Chinese had put into my hands, evidently with the idea that it would explain his spying into my windows, and his disconcerted appearance upon the beach where I was gathering firewood with which to cook an outdoor dinner.

I remembered the print and its taking vividly—almost too vividly, I told myself a bit shamefacedly as I recalled the length of time which had elapsed since it had been snatched.

Little Mrs. Durkee, her childish cooing way had persuaded Major Grantland to take some snapshots of her with his favorite camera. I had come across the lawn just as he was photographing her, and to my embarrassment and his, she had insisted that I be photographed with her. When the prints were completed, he gave her, as I supposed, all that he had made. She offered me one, but because I knew Dicky would not like me to have it, I had carelessly refused it. But I remembered it perfectly, and I recognized it now although the figure of Mrs. Durkee had been cut from it leaving only mine.

My Boss Man—
"This reason Lee Chow climb porch, look in window," the Chinese affirmed in monotonous sing-song inflections. "Must see you lady in picture, Misses Graham. No can talk anybody else."

"But why must you talk to me?" I persisted.

He looked at me steadily for a few seconds, and I had a sensation of being weighed and measured. It was with an odd little feeling of triumph, as of an examination passed, with high marks, that I saw him nod his head ever so slightly.

"Because you only person in world my boss man can trust," he answered, still in those fascinating monotonous accents.

My pulses accelerated distinctly and my accents were breathless as I put the question whose answer I had already guessed.

"Who is your boss man?" "You know," he returned surprisingly. "You know when Lee Chow show you little picture. But I tell you, my boss man Major Hugh Grantland."

There was no monotony in the accents now. He rolled the title almost as if he had been an ancient man, dour in pronouncing the name of his emperor. There was no more doubt of him in my mind, so unconsciously devoted were his voice and eyes when speaking of the officer whom he had served.

What Will Kattie Do?
My brain flashed back to the queer incoherent letter I had received from Hugh Grantland, an epistle which had made me believe that my old friend suddenly had gone insane. The appearance of this faithful servant of his—for I could not doubt that he was upon the matter. I felt it both my duty and an urgent wish to solve the mystery of that letter. Had the solution come to me without my volition?

"Have you any message for me from Major Grantland?" I asked eagerly.

His eyes changed to their former stolidity at once.

"No can tell now," he said with an almost imperceptible shrug of his shoulders.

"No can tell now," he said with an almost imperceptible shrug of his shoulders.

shoulders. "Lee Chow must wait and see. I know now you Misses Graham. Rest can wait. No hurry."

There was the deliberation of the ages in his words, but there was none in the alacrity with which he stepped across to my heap of firewood and stones, and stooping began to gather them up in his arms.

"Misses Graham show Lee Chow where she wants these," he said defiantly.

"But I cannot let you do this," I began. "You are not my servant, and—"

"Misses Graham mistaken," the astounding man firmly answered. "Misses Graham now Lee Chow's boss lady. He do all things for her. Misses Graham not carry things like these. Too heavy. Too much work. No can do."

He had arranged a truly incredible pile of the wood and stones in his arms by the time he had finished speaking and with his eyes on mine stood waiting.

"Misses Graham please walk ahead show Lee Chow where she wants these," he said. "Lee Chow come back for rest himself."

I mentally measured my will against this astonishing visitor's and lost inconspicuously.

But as Junior and I walked toward the place we had selected for our campfire while Lee Chow strode heavily a few paces back of us, could not help wondering with uneasy amusement what Kattie would do when she comprehended the situation.
