Your Problems

Martha Allen
Holding Friendship.

Dear Miss Allen: For the last nine months I have been busy with a young man on the average of once or twice a week.

I know I have a disposition far from perfect, being inclined at times to be quite fresh, even to the extent of wanting to be coaxed to speak.

I love this young man with my whole heart and must admit I am quite jealous.

The other night we went out with a party of six—my girl friend, another girl and the three "boy friends." My "boy friend" hardly knew I was there, paying all his attention to one of the other girls, even to the extent of admiring her and telling her how nice she looked. Do you not think that rather cheap of him?

I felt very badly about it. In the very near future we are going out again. I would appreciate it, if you would advise me how to act if he should do the same thing. BLUB.

You admit you are inclined to be jealous, so it may be that your jealousy exaggerated the attention paid by your friend to the other girl.

But you shouldn't resent it if he is just pleasantly complimentary to other girls. There was no harm in his telling your friend she looked nice. And remember he's not engaged to you and you have no claim on all his attention and time.

Also, it's just possible that knowing you are just a little jealous has teased you by making a fuss over her.

Your best plan is not to notice it if he again shows an inclination to be attentive to any other girl than your self. Don't allow yourself to be teased. Then he'll stop trying to tease you.

Unless he is rude when he takes you out, slighting you and flirting with others, ignore his compliments to other girls or join with them in complimenting them. Prove yourself the best humored, brightest girl of them all, then he'll be sure to quickly turn back again to you.

Above all overcome your moodiness and jealousy if you wish to hold his friendship.

Wretched: You who feel that the hurt of lost love is greater than you can bear, will never regret trying hard work as you heart balm. And be sure your work will bless you in more ways than one. You will gradually learn to forget—at least to forget the keen pain of your disappointment. As months and years pass, bitterness and grief will turn to peace and finally to renewed happiness.

But even more important, you will grow stronger and finer, more useful, interesting and charming through conquered despair and work well done. And you will acquire along with other gifts, the priceless gift of humor. For strange though it may

A Nice Way to Serve Spinach.
After the spinach is cooked and chopped press it into an oblong pan. Empty it out of this mold. Cut it into even squares and top each with a slice of hard-boiled egg. If you wish it warmer, place it in a warm oven for a few minutes before placing the egg on it.
