Law Clerks, Musicians and Accountants Turn Salesgirls Just for a Day

Altrusa Club Working for $1,000 Convention Fund—Wiii Furnish Christmas for Crippled Children's Home.

Salesgirls, just for a day!

When Altrusa club takes over the millinery stock of Miss Belle Hatch, 1829 Farnam street, on Saturday for a half price sale, the "salesgirls" will include from the club, Corinne Paulson, Thorsen, pianist; Ethel Sachra, expert accountant; Bertha Myers, director, Thompson-Belden company; Grace Rowland, law clerk, and Elsie Smith, school principal, and Miss Hatch herself, who is a member of the club.

Miss Myers was prone to recommend a hat as a "good investment," while Miss Rowland, as her sales tactics, will probably put a hat on trial, and if it be found becoming to the wearer, convict it to six months of hard labor on the head of the attractive customer.

A white elephant table will be a feature of the sale, which will continue all day Saturday.

Proceeds will be added to the convention fund for the national meeting to be held in Omaha next April. A total of $1,000 is needed. The club has divided into several groups and each group is devising its own method for making money.

On Saturday, December 6, the "bridge benefit" group will have a party at Burgess-Nash auditorium, to which the public is invited. Tickets are selling at 50 cents each. Door and score prizes will be given.

On Monday and Tuesday another group will sell dressed dolls at the court house. Funds from this effort will be used for the Christmas fund. The club will provide Christmas presents, a tree, and treats for children at the Battie B. Munroe Home for Crippled Children. Each little child in the home has been assigned to two of the club members, who will make it their certain task to communicate with Santa Claus and secure whatever present is desired.

Vaughn Bacon to Wed.

Of interest to Omahans is the announcement made Thursday in New York City of the engagement of Vaughn Bacon, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Bacon of this city, to Miss Virginia Hall of Kentucky, who is teaching in New York.

The young couple will be wed in three months, when Mr. Bacon moves to Louisiana on power plant design. They will visit in Omaha in the spring with Mr. Bacon's parents and his sister, Mrs. Roy A. Swanson.

Mr. Bacon is a graduate of Central High school, of Wisconsin university, where he was a Sigma Nu, and of Boston Institute of Technology.

The announcement was received at a dinner given by Mrs. Swanson for the Basons and the N. P. Swansons.

Your Problems

By Martha Allen

Letter Is Obviously a Fake.

Dear Miss Allen: On my vacation this summer I met a nice young man, who now corresponds with me. Is this right? I do not go with anyone else here, but I feel that there can never be anything serious out of that "summer flirtation." I imagine he is a little more interested than I am, and I'd like to drop him, because I don't like to hurt his feelings. What shall I do? Thanking you,

"SORRY."

There is no harm in a correspondence with an acquaintance, surely, in fact, much good may be had by writing and receiving letters.

You feel that there can never be anything serious out of that summer "flirtation," do you? Well, then, it was a flirtation. That is not so good. But even a flirtation may be turned into a serious friendship if the people who flirt are sincere.

Your letter lacks sincerity and depth. In one paragraph you seem to be hiding your seriousness on the subject. That is not so good. You don't care to hurt his feelings, if you really don't care for the boy, and never will, the kindest thing to do is to discontinue the friendship.

I have answered your letter at some pains, though obviously it is a fake.

A Hopeless Love.

Dear Miss Allen: I am desperately in love with a young man of about 22, who has never paid me the slightest attention. I am 19. What can I do to win him? He is so indifferent and yet I believe he cares a little for me.

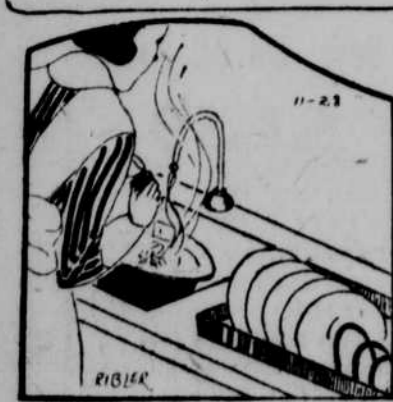

I am sure I could win him if I could get him away from the influence of his parents. How can I manage this?

HAZEL.

You are going at things in altogether the wrong way. A young man who must be weaned from his parents before he can care for you is not the man for you. If you did succeed in winning him away from the persons who have loved him most during all these years and to whom he owes all gratitude and affection, what assurance have you that they might not win him back? Can't you learn to share him?

Under all the circumstances, I hardly think he is the man for you.

Allow Dishes to Drain.

Instead of drying your dishes as soon as they are washed place them in a drainer. If rinsed in hot water first they will dry perfectly. This will save time, energy and washing of dish towels. Dry the silver only.

The Ultimatum Mother Graham Gave Madge.

"One hundred dollars," I repeated mechanically, then chided myself as I saw the hurt, apologetic look upon my mother-in-law's face. Her fall might have set her wits to wondering, but she was sane enough to interpret and resent any astonished reluctance on my part to grant the odd request she had made.

"I know that it's a lot to ask you to do," she said, "but I must have that sum on that day, and I haven't enough in the bank of my own—I know my income hasn't come in yet—and I cannot ask Richard. If you can lend it to me—why, when my money comes in I'll—"

"No, I am telling you an untruth. I don't know when I can pay it back to you. I don't—"

I put my hand tenderly over her lips.

"Don't talk any more about paying it back unless you wish to have an old-fashioned row with me. Of course I'll get you the money, but I won't need to bring it here. Surely you will be well enough to come home before then."

A curious embarrassed flush stole over her face.

"Oh, I'm sure I can't," she said. "I must stay here through Tuesday anyway. And I want you to come here early that morning, and stay here all through that day. There are things—I wish you to do for me."

The Nurse's Dictum.

A light tap on the door warned me that the nurse was coming back and that she would permit no more conversation for a while. So, with the mental comment that it would do no harm to agree to everything my mother-in-law asked, trusting that by Tuesday she would be restored to the sanity which appeared to be lacking in her requests, I bent closer to her and hurriedly whispered:

"Of course you shall stay here, or do anything else you wish. And I'll be on hand early Tuesday morning with the money. Come in."

I raised my head and my voice at the last words and the nurse in answer pushed open the door. I stepped aside as she crossed to the bed and bent over Mother Graham. When she rose she permitted herself a professional smile.

"I think you have done her good," she said, "but we won't overdo it. I want her to sleep now."

My mother-in-law put up an imperative hand, and I smothered a smile. The assurance I had given her evidently had dispelled much of her nervousness, and she was ready again actively to enter the arena of life.

That the strictures of a hospital nurse would mean less than nothing to Mother Graham I was well aware, but a glance at the physiognomy of the woman standing by the bed told me that Greek indeed would meet Greek when my mother-in-law attempted to run counter to her mandates.

"Don't You Dare—"

"If I let you know when I want to sleep," Mother Graham said tartly. "I'm not a baby to be put into a crib and told to go to sleep now. I want to know a few things more before I'm tucked in for the night. Did you bring Richard Second with you?"

The nurse gave me an imperative signal to leave the room, but though

Ruth Brandeis Weds in Paris Wednesday

Miss Ruth Brandeis, millionaire Omaha heiress, will marry Armand Massart, a Frenchman, at Saint Pierre de Challes church at noon, December 3, according to cablegram from Paris.

Miss Brandeis was married about 12 years ago to Irving Stern of the New York Stern Department stores and went to Paris where her husband represented his interests as buyer. Her separation from Mr. Stern was very quiet and nothing was said of it here at the time. Mr. Stern's sister was a member of the titled set in Paris.

Miss Brandeis is remembered as a most strikingly beautiful woman. She was called the "Spanish type," slender, clear olive skin, dark hair and large dark eyes. She is near 33 years in age.

The Brandeis home when she resided here, was in the place now owned by Miss Jessie Millard. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brandeis, had a country place, Arlena Towers, near New York, one of the show places of its time. It was there she was married. The name Arlena was derived from "Arthur" and "Zorlena," the first names of Miss Ruth's parents.

During the war, she did considerable relief work among wounded soldiers. Mrs. George Brandeis of Omaha was one of the generous contributors to the fund.

Mr. Arthur Brandeis of New York and E. John Brandeis of Omaha, the bride's brother, will attend the wedding in Paris next Wednesday.
