

BRUINS AFTER GIANT FLY-HAWK BECAUSE HE CAN KNOCK BALL FARTHER THAN SECOND BASE

New York National Manager Seeks Outfielder Arnold Stutz and Pitcher Who Can Last More Than Three Innings Without Calling for Assistance.

By DAVIS P. WALSH.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—In spite of the fact that John McGraw broke into the prints this morning with a statement to the effect that he intended to stand pat on the Giants, it is quite within range of possibility that a material change may be effected in personnel of the ball club before nightfall. In brief and to wit, the Giants are fixing to make a trade with another big league club and it is the writer's information that the latter is the Chicago Cubs.

The identity of the players involved is the sole uncertainty about the transaction, as a matter of fact. That the Giants and Cubs have come together on a player deal is also a fact, not fancy.

One man persistently mentioned in the whispers about the proposed trade is Irish Meusel, a young man highly esteemed in those parts several years ago, but not regarded with any degree of managerial affection at the moment. The Cubs need a right hand hitting outfielder who can slap one further than second base.

The Cubs are total strangers with fielders who have a punch. This condition is particularly annoying because the Cubs are playing 77 games a year in a hotbox. A man with Meusel's propensity for hitting them high and far would get a lot of home runs in Chicago, whereas in New York they are camping out near fences and converting his long flies into putouts. It is the writer's understanding that Meusel is the man the Cubs are seeking.

Their outfielders are the fast roving type and the fences in Chicago are cramp in their style no little. A man can't do much roving with a concrete wall constantly at his elbow.

An outfielder and a pitcher are the men whom McGraw is believed to be seeking in return for Meusel. One report named Arnold Stutz as the outfielder in question, but whether McGraw has been sold on this part of the proposition is not known. Stutz didn't hit the size of his neck band in Chicago last year and has outgrown his welcome there.

He is a former Giant, however, and McGraw has established something of a reputation for esteeming ex-players. The cases of Heinie Groh and Charley Herzog are notable expressions of this complex.

The identity of the pitcher involved in the negotiations has not been disclosed. He is believed, however, to be a young man who can pitch three and a half innings without calling for aid, succor and assistance, something of a novelty at the polo grounds.

They dispersed to gather again in 1925 at Catalina Island, off the coast of California, the magnates by resolution, voiced wholehearted confidence in the administration of Commissioner Kenosaw Mountain Landis, condemning "the attempts of any or all who seek by embarrassing, guerrilla tactics, and otherwise

'Zeke' Roberts Leaves School

Ames, Ia., Dec. 5.—Deprived of "Zeke" Roberts, star guard of last year, who left school last week, Coach Bill Chandler faces a herculean task of developing some one to take the place of Roberts, from a group of men that are not promising to be outstanding stars.

Last season Roberts played at forward as well as guard, during part of the Valley campaign and although he did not star from that end of the floor, his floor work was always on par with any man in the Valley. It was his work as floor guard that made Roberts' name in basket ball and Chandler will have a job to fill this vacancy. At the present time Fisher looks as though he would come the nearest to the job. Fisher was on the varsity squad, last year, but played forward most of the time. Chandler feels, however, that with practice, he may work in as a floor guard and take Roberts' place. Fisher is fast and handy with the ball but needs experience.

Olympic Congress Will Dig Down Deep Into Last Big Game

ARIS, Dec. 5.—All the outstanding questions bearing on the successful staging of the Olympic games will be discussed at the Olympic congress to be held in Prague the last week in May, according to Baron.

The subjects include definition of the amateur status, the Olympic oath, reduction in the number of events, development of the spirit of fair play, definition of the powers of judges as well as of the various national committees and the problem of transporting and lodging competitors.

The congress also will consider authorizing the holding of the winter sports section of the Olympic games in some region where these sports are practiced, irrespective of the country in which the general games are held.

Thus, if the games are staged by Holland, the winter sports section might be given to Switzerland or Scandinavia.

Simultaneously but independently of the Olympic congress will be held an Olympic pedagogical congress. Delegates sent by the countries will consider the whole problem of education and sports.
