

One of "Four Horsemen" Dinner Guest in Omaha

One of "The Four Horsemen" was a dinner guest in Omaha Thursday night. Not a member of the Apocalyptic quartet, but one of the "horsemen" from the Notre Dame team now returning to South Bend from its victory over Leland Stanford on New Year's day to the convincing score of 27 to 10.

A Wife's Confessionals

by Adele Garrison

I pride myself upon not showing astonishment at most unexpected happenings, but at sight of the two Chinese suddenly materializing from the woodland at the blast I had blown upon the whistle Lee Chow had given me, I stared open-mouthed first at the men and then at Lee Chow.

He permitted himself a lofty smile then spoke one word softly: "Watch!"

The admonition was unnecessary, my eyes followed his every motion most carefully but when he waved his hand in lordly fashion, and the two Chinese sank immediately out of sight behind the shrubbery, I felt a desire for laughter so strong that I had difficulty in controlling my risibles.

It was so obviously theatrical, so blatant a bid for my astonishment—and gratification—that I am afraid I did not do full justice to Lee Chow's very real desire to serve me in my amusement at these melodramatic little stunts she had staged.

I did not suppose that Lee Chow was familiar with the poems of Sir Walter Scott, yet there was something very reminiscent in the performance of a scene from "The Lady of the Lake," when the Scottish chieftain brought a body of clansmen fully armed from the heather at a blast of his bugle, and sent them to cover again at a wave of his hand.

I added the mental comment that some laundry in the vicinity of Marvin must be short-handed this morning even as Lee Chow looked at me with a bland smile, and quired:

"The Impulse Was Strong."

"You see? You like?"

I knew that the wily Chinese had staged the thing for some purpose of his own. He must have surmised that after the children's encounter with the tramp I would be watching the woodland, and deliberately ranged up and down through it until my attention had been attracted to his movements, and I had investigated something upon which he had counted when he had planted the "snipers" from the laundry. The impulse was strong upon me to reproach him for making me the central figure in so absurd a performance, but a sudden conjecture as fantastic as it was convincing, stopped me.

For years Hugh Grantland has kept me informed of his every change of address by post cards, with his initials and address—nothing more, because of his fastidious fear of some possible criticism of our friendship. The post cards stopped coming only a few weeks before my receipt of the weird fantastic letter from him, which said that he was facing death, and would never be able to see me again. Long ago when he told me that he always would keep me advised of his whereabouts, he also said that I was to remember he would always be watching over me.

Was it possible that he had kept that watch by means of this faithful servant, so doglike in his devotion to the army officer that his master's slightest word had the force of a solemn injunction?

"Like a Dash of Water." During all these years had I been under the espionage of this bizarre-looking Oriental? I knew that Hugh Grantland was wealthy enough to indulge himself in the employment of a hundred such men instead of one if he so desired, and I thrilled for a second with the idea of such fantastic devotion to my safety as this watchfulness indicated.

Like a sudden dash of cold water upon this ingenious theory came the remembrance of the fact that Lee Chow's explanation of his midnight climb to the roof of the farmhouse and his peering in at my window, was the necessity of establishing my identity with the kodak print of me, taken by Hugh Grantland. He could not have been watching over me for years without being familiar with my appearance. But—

My imagination jumped to another angle—Lee Chow's oriental mind was capable of any amount of camouflage and round-about wandering in order to obtain the effect he wished to produce. He might have known my appearance perfectly and yet pretended ignorance for some mysterious reason of his own.

I came back from the realm of conjecture with an effort and with no sentiment of conviction upon which my bewildered mind could rest. Lee Chow's eyes, expressive as those of a jade god, stared into mine, and I knew that he was waiting for the answer to the question he had asked me concerning his spectacular precautions for my safety.

"I like it very much, Lee Chow," I said. "But why have you brought these men here?"

"For tomorrow," he replied, "so when howe lady and old boss lady come here, talk big white man, they not be afraid, Lee Chow here his men here. Big white man can hurt. No can do."

The Housewife's Idea Box

A Substitute for Whipped Cream. Here is a fine substitute for whipped cream. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff. Grate a cup of apples or use apple sauce. Add one-half cup of fine sugar. Beat all together until stiff. It looks like whipped cream, tastes good and can be used for cake or desserts.

YOUR PROBLEMS

by Martha Allen

A Mother's Experience.
Dear Miss Allen: I am a constant reader of your column, and last evening I read "Young Mothers'" letter. It brought back memories of my own experience and I wonder if by telling my story I might help her to decide her problem.

I married the man I loved, and two years later a darling baby girl came to crown my happiness, for I was then happy; I had a lovely home and all I wanted.

My husband owned his business and was making good, but after baby came he did not seem the same. He was seldom home and was cross and ill-tempered when he was. Gossip soon told me the cause. Another woman was winning him from his home and baby, and I told him I would leave him with the baby, but he only laughed at me, and oh, Miss Allen, how it hurt me, for I still loved him. A few months passed and I could stand it no longer, so I wrote him a nice letter, left it on the table and walked out of my once happy home.

I went to a city far away and went to work, but I was miserable. I cried for my baby and would wake up in the night thinking I heard her cry for me. I never wrote home to find out how she was. I thought that in time I could forget, but I could not, and one year from the day I left my home I went back to find my baby. My folks had taken her, and oh, the joy I found holding her to my heart once more.

My husband was a different man; he was repentant and heartbroken; he had closed our home the night he found me gone, and everything was as I had left it. He said his love was mine, that it was only infatuation he had for the other woman. (That is my story, Miss Allen.) I spent a year of misery—that seemed like ages. Young mother, stay with your babies; do not leave them, for maybe you could not come back to your home as I did, and those babies are worth more than any man's love.

I am happy again now, and, young mother, you will find your reward if you stand by those babies.

My letter is long, Miss Allen, but it may help some one.
A MOTHER WHO KNOWS.

No Cause to Worry.
Perplexed: From your husband's point of view he is doing nothing wrong. His recreation is quite harmless in my opinion and will not lead to anything worse. At least you have no cause to worry now and are making a great mistake if opposing him so strenuously and forcing him to disregard your wishes in the matter. When he goes away for an evening every three or four weeks, you ought to be very grateful that he does not return to you drunk and that it is every three or four weeks and not every night that he leaves you.

Bride to Be: Have your dining room lighted with candles. There is always mystery and beauty in candlelight. Use a beautiful bouquet in the center of the table, pink roses, if your color scheme is pink.

A light white cake is preferable for a wedding cake.

If you are taking a trip, a traveling suit with a chic hat and smart gloves and shoes, with a colorful costume, especially for this time of year. But if you are having a large wedding, I think the white gown would be my choice.

By all means take the trip instead of staying at home for a dance.

Daisy Doll: The Pepper Pot club is composed of a group of girls who have been friends for a number of years. There are only eight members. Capes are always worn, more or less, but the three-piece suit is more fashionable now than the cape.
