

Teeth like pearls. They are the pride of the world's richest actress, Mollie Parryss, the Parisian revue favorite. Her collection of jewels is reputed to be worth more than $1,000,000. The rope of pearls in the photograph is said to be worth $100,000.

Boys' band of the Near East Relief orphanage in Jerusalem playing American and English Christmas hymns at the annual Yuletide celebration of the Anglo-American colony.

Scene in Kent, England. This striking transformation of a sandpit in Kent, England, into an oriental scene was the work of half an hour. The result suggests that effective "locations," beloved of the movie operator, are not confined to the far west or the near east.

Jack and the giant. Jackie Coogan appears on the best of terms with the giant, Jelly Erdolin, beloved of all Berlin children.

A regular old sea horse. One of the features of the street pageant organized by the ships and naval establishment of Devonport, England, in aid of the funds of the Royal Naval and Marines Orphanage homes. This queer-looking cavalcade was snapped aboard H. M. S. King George V.

England's fairest twins. The Hon. Alison and Margaret Hove Ruthven, daughters of Maj. Gen. Lord Ruthven, commanding the London troops.

New St. Simon comes to St. Paul. The statues of the giants which adorn the face of St. Paul cathedral in London have been so eaten away by the devastating foggy atmosphere that they are being replaced by replicas of the originals.
