When Miss Keller graduated from Harvard her lifelong friend, Mark Twain, telegraphed his congratulations, concluding by saying: "The two greatest of this age are Helen Keller and Napoleon."

On the luncheon table before Miss Keller was a vase of flowers. At Miss Thomsen's request she touched and named the different flowers and actually told their color.

With a smile and hearty handshake for everyone who greeted her, Miss Keller stood in the receiving line for two hours Monday afternoon at a tea given in her honor at the Hotel Fontenelle.

Miss Keller was attractively gowned in Alice blue georgette, which was headed, and wore a corsage of orchids.

No plans for Tuesday have been made for Miss Keller except the mass meeting in the evening at the Brandeis theater.

Babe of Slain Man Taken to Bellome Trial

Six-Month-Old Infant of Santoro Salerno Cries as Jurors Are Questioned.

Santoro Salerno, II, age 6 months, cried from the blankets in which he was wrapped as a jury was being drawn in criminal court Monday morning to try the man the state alleges killed the infant's father.

Mrs. Santoro Salerno, widow of the slain man, sat in deep mourning beside the cot where her face expressionless but her eyes watchful as the business of choosing 12 men progressed.

Only a few feet distant sat Rocco Bellome, the defendant, who is charged with first degree murder. His countenance also was expressionless and he showed no signs of nervousness.

"I didn't kill Salerno," he said. Further than that he would say nothing. Back of the rail in the criminal courtroom fully 100 Italians sat leaning forward eagerly as prospective jurors were called and questioned.

In a dying statement, Salerno told officers the man who shot him was dressed in a woman's black coat and hat. A hat and coat answering Salerno's description was found in the Bellome home, and Bellome was arrested.

much good they did. They didn't bring Floyd out. "Then John Gerald went in the last time. He had been in before and said that he had cleared out the passage and that he would bring Floyd out on the next trip. He didn't bring him out. In fact, I don't think he ever got to him the first time."

"The last time I went into the cave was early Friday morning to take back the air hose. It didn't run very far back and I thought that I would go back as far as I could and see if Floyd was still alive. The radio test had been made that morning, but I had my doubts about whether it meant anything or not."

"Gerald says that he cleared out the passage. Maybe he did. But this is certain, when I got to the blockade I found it was in exactly the same place that it was Wednesday afternoon."

"I can't say that they were the same rocks, of course, because I didn't mark the others, but it looks funny to me, that's all."

"Well, I called to Floyd as loud as I could but couldn't hear a thing. When I was down there Wednesday I could hear him in there yelling and begging for help. But there wasn't a sound this time. That's what makes me think he is dead."

COLLINS' PLIGHT INQUIRY SUBJECT

(Continued from Page One) said, but did not produce the same effect. Louisville, Ky., Feb. 9.—One of the two chief outside witnesses of the predicament of Floyd Collins in Sand Cave, Lieut. Robert A. Burdon, when he learned of the military inquiry ordered by Lieutenant Governor Denhardt today, was emphatic in his assertions that there had been definite opposition to the rescue of Collins by some of the natives there when he was there early last week.

"When I went back to the cave Wednesday morning," said Lieutenant Burdon, "after resting from our tremendous efforts with the jack under the boulder Tuesday evening, they told me that there had been a cave-in that had blocked the passage and that I couldn't go in. They wouldn't let me get by."

"Succes" Miller managed to slip past them some way and he and Homer Collins went down. When he came out he was looking more scared than I ever saw him during the whole time. His nose was bloody.

"He wouldn't tell me what was the matter, but told me for God's sake not to go back in there and to see that Homer Collins didn't go in again if I had to sit in the entrance all day long."

"I went back in by myself a little later to take the telephone back, and I think that was the last time that he was in the cave. "Late in the afternoon I heard somebody calling for me. I was told that I could go back in the cave if I wanted to now and that they had picked a crew for me. Each of the crew picked must have been armed with a good drink of whisky because I could smell it on all of them."

"I went down the passage feet first. I guess I was about 50 feet from Floyd when I had to stop. I could hear him yelling for help all the time. I hit the blockade with my feet, but was afraid to push very hard, because I didn't know what I might bring down."

"So I backed up and went in head first. I soon saw that there was no chance of us getting through. "After that I wasn't allowed to get near the entrance. Some other crews went in, but I don't know how
