Ford's Museum.
The Queen of Sheba.
The Crawling Woman.
Chicago, 3 Hours, $5.
By ARTHUR BRISBANE.

Henry Ford plans a museum showing the methods of transportation through the ages, up to the automobile, submarine and flying machine of today. His agents now are looking for one of the old, wood-burning locomotives, with a smokestack as big around as the top as a lady's hoopskirt. If you know of such a wood-burning engine, very old, at a fair price, write to Henry Ford.

A transportation museum, done as Ford would do it, would have a great educational value. The collection would show the queen of Sheba, on her camel, bumping along to see Solomon. Also the Phoenicians, fierce Semetic seamen, first to venture out of sight of land without a compass, going past Gibraltar, into the great ocean to explore and rob the British islands, scouring the seas, for precious goods to ornament King Solomon's temple.

A complete museum might need a building as big as the Ford factory. It would include, of course, that wonderful carriage on which Kublai Khan went to war, a platform fastened to the backs of four elephants, Kublai sitting on his throne directing his archers, shooting over the elephants' heads.

And also to remind the world that there are things to be seen in a museum should show the inside of a British mine, with a gallery about three feet high, and a British woman, crawling on her hands and knees to the mouth of the mine, dragging behind her a little coal car by an iron chain fastened around her neck, and passing out underneath her body.

A museum of transportation would be a history of the world and of civilization's growth. It would show the slaves in the Roman galley, keeping time to the pounding of a hammer, lashed by a man walking among them with a heavy whip.

Every man was chained to his oar. When he fainted one blow of the sword cut his hand off at the wrist. His body was thrown into the water, and another slave was chained in his place.

Ford's little gas engine is a great improvement over that method of transportation.

Most interesting of all in that Ford museum, and may it appear there soon, would be a flying machine, able to go as fast as the best British planes, six miles a minute, better still, one mile faster per minute than any plane, with this sign underneath it:

"This is Henry Ford's one-hundred thousandth flying machine, built to save time and make the United States safe from attack."

If Henry Ford will build that machine, and the 99,999 machines before it, he will have owing to him a debt of gratitude even greater than at present. From every man, woman and child in the United States.

He will have done, with industrial genius what slow-thinking politicians have not the will or the brains to do, for the country's safety.

Mr. Ford's people will find an excellent description of Kublai Khan's four-elephant platform car in Marco Polo's book of travels.

With the four-elephant car for transportation, Mr. Ford should exhibit his own first four-cylinder car.

He would show, of course, the original sedan, the sedan chair in which the dandy, and the grand lady of Paris rode to dinner and balls, with a man harnessed in front and another behind.

He would show men carried up the mountainside in chairs, on the backs of other men, the African riding on his water buffalo, the harnessed ostrich and Maud S., the wonder of the age, with one William H. Vanderbilt driving her, at a speed less than 30 miles an hour which she couldn't keep up for more than one mile.

And there would be the carrier pigeon, with the message fastened to its leg, shown beside the wireless, telegraph and radio.

Before Mr. Ford is 30 years older he will be looking around to purchase one of the engines now used on the Twentieth Century express between New York and Chicago. He will put it beside the old wood-burning engine, under it this sign:

"Only a few years ago men relied on such engines as this for quick transportation. That was before Henry Ford lifted passengers from the earth into the air, carrying them from New York to Chicago, in three hours, for $5."

That is coming, and Henry Ford is the man to do it. If he will. Thus far no man on earth has taken two such gigantic steps as Ford would take if he added the flying machine to his automobile accomplishments.

But he is young, as ambitious as he was when he worked at his first machine. He and his son between them will probably do the job.

Art Randall Brings Down House at Strand

Arthur Randall

Arthur Randall and his kings of jazz, the Royal Fontenelle orchestra, offers a banquet of toe-ticking syncopation as the stage attraction at the Strand theater this week. "Indian Dawn" opens this music feast as an appetizer, with "All Alone" and "Me and the Boy Friend" as the body of the meal. "Flier Rag," with the crescendo notes of the Sousaphone, furnishes a splendid desert, with "Do Wacka Do" as demi-tasse. Patrons at early performances demanded more, but that's all there was, there wasn't any more. The orchestra is scheduled for five weeks' showing, but from the enthusiasm shown Strand patrons will never get "fed up" on Randall's melodies.

$50 Judgment on Isaac Konecky in Municipal Court

Deputy Sheriff Loses Case Involving Bond for Trunk; Judge Accuses Man of Contempt.

Monday afternoon Municipal Judge Sophus Nebel, Jr., entered a judgment of $50 against Isaac Konecky, deputy sheriff, and Mrs. Anna Konecky, in an action brought by Mrs. Frank A. Werner, 311 North Twenty-fifth street.

The judge found that Mrs. Konecky received $10 from Mrs. Werner for a bond in connection with a trunk replevin case, that the deputy sheriff had knowledge of the transaction and was a party to the imposition on Mrs. Werner.

Judge Scores Konecky. "It looks like you held this trunk until the attorney's fees were paid," the judge said to the deputy sheriff.

Mrs. Werner testified that she went to the sheriff's office and met Konecky who advised her how to proceed to get her trunk from Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hirs.

Konecky gave advice. "Konecky sent me to Attorney O'Hara and I paid the attorney $10 for a bond which Mrs. Konecky furnished on the replevin action," Mrs. Werner said.

Bosworth Lived Life of London's Heroes

Hobart Bosworth

Literature has its London—filmdom has its Bosworth. The names of Jack London and Hobart Bosworth could be interchanged with little more necessity for revision of biographies than that of occupation.

Struggle has been the keynote of the lives of both—struggle and adventure. The analogy has been drawn the closer by the fact that Bosworth is recognized as the foremost exponent of London roles on the screen.

Jordan is a proud, domineering old man, but he is a fighter. Hobart Bosworth in real life is a fighter. He has fought adversity ever since he ran away from Marietta, O., where he was born, and, only 12 years old, went to sea as cabin boy on a sailing ship.

Tell Juvenile Court, in Trial of Young Death Car Driver, Aged Man Often Stepped in Front of Autos.

Andrew Christianson, aged street railway company foreman, was pictured as a death defying dare devil by witnesses for the defense of Edwin Lockhart, 17, Technical High school student, who is on trial in juvenile court for causing Christianson's death while exceeding the speed limit.

The trial is the first one ever held under supervision of juvenile court before an adult jury here. Witnesses testified that Christianson had acquired a habit of stepping boldly in front of moving vehicles, frequently stopping them and usually disregarding them as he pursued his duties of repairing tracks and pavement.

Young Lockhart and Donald F. Falconer, 17, son of County Commissioner Falconer, and Laurence Turner, 15, all testified that they were not moving rapidly when the accident occurred. O. T. Lockhart, the boy's father, declared that his son had always been an extraordinarily careful driver.

Plate County to Do Little Work on Roads This Year. Columbus, Feb. 16.—New construction work and graveling of state highways in Plate county will be cut to the minimum this year because last year's operations left a deficit of $30,000 in the county's fund for maintenance of state highways.
