Chicago, March 2.-The New Year's breakfast of the Richard Tomkinsons, at which the host's "best friend" calmly confessed his love for Mrs. Tomkinson has barely scratched the surface of Chicago's Decision Today

When Mrs. Bradford Hill Whiting, wife of Tomkinson's "best friend." heard of the divorce agreement, in which her husband was an angle, she refused to square the triangle by giving the wealthy young husband and bon vivant his freedom.

Mrs. Whiting's suit calls only for a verdict of "separate maintenance" with her mate as firmly tied to her as the day their wedding knot was tangled and retied by a double ceremony. Before her marriage to Whiting she had been Paulette Picard. Whiting never waited for the legal time of his divorce from his first wife, the daughter of Graham Harris, to elapse before marrying the spirited Paulette.

"Paulette Welshed." "Paulette weished," said Whiting oday, when his wife was granted an injunction forbidding him to disoose of any of his property while the suit is pending. She failed to take the plans of her husband's happiness as lightly as did Richard Tomkinson. "Dick, I love your wife," said "Brad" Whiting at the New Year's morning breakfast in the Tomkinson apartment. Then he added: "I mean to marry her. You and your wife have been friends-not lovers-for a long time."

"Dick Tomkinson today explained his feelings in the affair: " 'Brad's' declaration amazed me. I say 'amazed,' rather than shocked.

For my wife and I had been-let's call it incompatible-for some time. We were going to separate, anyway, but until 'Brad' Whiting's confession on New Year's morning. I never had the slightest suspicion that he had anything to do with it. Then Peggy admitted it, too.

"In spite of our differences, I was still fond of Peggy and I asked 'Brad' if he was in earnest, 'Brad' swore he was sincere and put up some Liberty bonds to protect my wife's interests until she and Dick could get married."
